Lloyds Bans War Policies For England As Poor Risk

Unsettled Conditions in Europe Responsible for Decision.

Monroe Doctrine Revision Is Topic

War and Peace.

The great British insurance firm of Lloyds was reported to have abolished all war risk policies in Britain as the empire was shaken by the crisis resulting from King Edward's romance.

The Spanish Embassy at Paris charged that a German war plane shot down a French airliner that landed in Insurgent Spanish territory, injuring four persons.

Co-operation with the League of Nations in peace efforts and a multilateral declaration of a "Modernized" Monroe doctrine by all New World republics were discussed by Secretary of State Hull and other leaders at the Inter-American Peace Conference at Buenos Aires.

Risks Are Refused.

By the United Press

London, (Wednesday), Dec. 9.—The great insurance firm of Lloyds has abolished all war risk policies in Britain, it was learned today.

The action was taken at a conference of Lloyds' underwriters two weeks ago, but has just been revealed.

It indicates that the great insurance firm, which for decades has been willing to place odds on virtually "anything in the world," considers the present European situation so unstable that it cannot afford to offer odds against war.

Lloyds' action is understood to mean that henceforth it will insure no buildings or other immovable possessions which ordinarily are insurable against war risks in the United Kingdom.

The firm is understood to be contemplating extending its ban on war risk insurance to the entire world, beginning January 1.

The decision will not affect property in transit because it is covered under marine risks which remain unaffected by the new ruling.

It is understood that the decision has been under consideration several times, but particularly since all British insurance companies (as differentiated from Lloyds underwriters) likewise abolished war-risk clauses.

Hence the action does not indicate any sudden war panic, although it is understood to have been influenced considerably by

Spaniards Say Germans Shot Down French Plane

Paris, Dec. 8 (AP).—The Spanish Embassy charged today a German warplane shot down the French airliner that crashed in insurgent Spanish territory injuring four persons.

An international Red Cross doctor named Henny, two Paris newspapermen and a French woman were injured.

"This aggression may have grave consequences," the embassy statement said.

Reports of the attack caused a sensation in the Paris press. Newspapers printed bulletins in heavy black type.

Premier Leon Blum's Populaire in a "last minute" bulletin said it had learned the French plane was not a commercial ship but a military plane assigned to the French Embassy in Madrid.

Madrid, Dec. 8.—New French and Russian type machine guns were rushed into position tonight as Madrid defenders crouched behind sandbag and mattress barricades for an oncoming Fascist attack expected to determine quickly the fate of the capital.

Defense officers declared the newly-installed machine guns were of French and Russian manufacture and announced new antitank guns, capable of firing from any angle, were ready to thrust back the Fascist attack.

The mattress barricades lay behind the lines of barbed-wire, trench and dugout network which thousands of laborers had built in night-and-day work since the Fascist advance stalled late in November.

Army officers believed a bitter cold wave which struck central Spain may have been responsible for failure of the Insurgents to attack today.

End The Spoils System

Whatever the points of similarity between Franklin D. Roosevelt and Andrew Jackson, there is between the governmental problems of their respective periods a vast and all-important difference. The measure of this difference may be found in the development of the Nation's business from the horse-and-buggy environment of a century ago to the intricate, highly technical, streamlined conditions of today.

When President Jackson fettered the spoils system on the Federal Government, between 1829 and 1837, he was able to argue in its defense that the duties of public office were then so simple that most of them could be performed by completely untrained individuals with average intelligence.

That reasoning was defensible for a Government which had relatively few duties and those for the most part very simple. It is indefensible for a Government which feels it necessary to intervene, to direct, and to plan for the future of the involved economy which America has developed in the century since Jackson's day. It would be as rational to expect the Army to operate today with the equipment of "Old Hickory" as it is to defend for this age the civil service methods which he indorsed.

And yet those methods, at the close of President Roosevelt's first term of office, are still to a large extent in force. Although the New Deal has increased the powers and the responsibilities of the Federal Government to an unprecedented degree, it has countenanced no parallel advance in the selection and training of the personnel to whom these new powers are entrusted. The coining of the word "Farleyism" illustrates how well content President Roosevelt has been with a horse-and-buggy attitude toward the problem of Government personnel. His first Administration has regarded the civil service in much the same contemptuous way as those who derided it as the "snivel" service in its early days.

* * * *

A continuation of this attitude may easily result in national disaster. And it is with a profound conviction of the basic importance of the personnel problem that The Post will tomorrow print the first of a series of articles on the civil service, following this series with further analyses of the objectives of the merit system, deficiencies in present methods, the way in which the problem has been attacked by foreign governments, and other aspects tending to improve popular appreciation of the issues involved.

If the Federal Government is going to encroach progressively on the sphere of private initiative it must prove at least as competent as business in the selection and development of its technicians. At present its competence in handling the personnel problem is open to serious question. Yet President Roosevelt has stated his belief that "it will be possible for this country to work out a system of public service that will be at least as honest and efficient as the British civil service, and that will have more initiative and adaptability."

The time is now ripe to begin to make this assurance good. Not since the days of Washington has there been a President with less political need to bow to patronage than is the case with Mr. Roosevelt today. Never was there a time when Congress, to whose members patronage problems are now largely a nuisance, was more ready to co-operate. Never has there been more widespread public support for a reform which all can see is a necessary preliminary to secure fulfillment of the many promises which this Government has made to the people.

* * * *

The selection of personnel is clearly an executive function and the establishment of sound and progressive principles for that selection is just as clearly an executive responsibility. These essential duties can no longer be properly or safely delegated to a party politician. They demand the development of a powerful, efficient and independent Civil Service Commission as a starting point. They demand revision of present regulations which can only be regarded as the introduction of a true merit system. They demand immediate, concentrated and intelligent thought, first to elucidate and then to eliminate difficulties which will not be easily cleared away.

But in taking up these imperative duties, President Roosevelt will be assured of the support of the entire Nation. The Post, for its part, will do what it can to arouse public interest and further understanding of the many complicated factors which go to make up a problem the solution of which is now so long overdue.

Clamping down on corn acreage in a definite move toward crop production control, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace revealed the 1937 Federal farm program last night, closely patterned on this year's setup.

As before, payments will be made to farmers for diversion of land from soil-depleting crops to soil-conserving crops, and for soil-building practices, all under Federally specified conditions.

Jury Convicts Warring Mob Of Shooting

Two Witnesses Held on Perjury Charges as Trial Is Ended.

6 Guilty Gangsters Face Sentences of 5 to 22 Years for Crime.

Underworld mirth over the "lost memory" trial of six members of the notorious "Warring Mob," accused of a gang shooting, turned into horrified amazement last night after a jury convicted the gangsters and two of the Government's star witnesses were arrested on perjury charges.

A jury which heard Joseph E. O'Brien, 23, crippled victim of the shooting, and two of his lieutenants, deny that any of the defendants were in the rival gang that attacked him last July, deliberated four hours before arriving at a verdict.

The Warring mobsters appeared confident of acquittal when they stood up to receive the verdict, but their expressions did not change when the foreman announced "guilty on both counts." The convicted men face imprisonment of from 5 to 25 years on charges of assault with intent to kill and assault with a dangerous weapon.

The jurors left the courtroom at 3:20 o'clock with the warning of Assistant District Attorney Irvin Goldstein that unless blanket convictions were returned Washington faced an outbreak of gang warfare ringing in their ears.

Garnett Pleased.

"The verdict unquestionably is a victory for the orderly processes of the court," said District Attorney Leslie C. Garnett.

"It will teach gangsters that the courts can't be trifled with," said Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown.

Immediately after the jury retired, perjury charges were placed against prosecution witnesses William R. (Country) Carpenter and Henry (Spike) Behrle, who were stricken with the same memory lapses that overcame Joseph E. O'Brien, victim of the gang shooting, when he testified Monday.

Two Ordered Held.

Carpenter and Behrle could remember their names and even identify their signatures on statements they signed implicating the "Warring mobsters," but beyond that their memory was blank.

Justice Peyton Gordon, whose wrath had been aroused earlier when O'Brien refused to admit he had been shot until he was ordered to, grew florid with anger as "Country" and "Spike" blandly explained the weakness of their memory.

As each of the men left the witness chair, Judge Gordon curtly commanded:

"Lock him up."

Even before the trial of the six accused men—Charles R. (Rags) Warring, Samuel S. (Monty) Montgomery, Joseph S. Bond, George (Teddy) Tear, Clarence (Cocky) Ware and John Sweeney—had been concluded, Assistant District Attorney Charles Murray went before the grand jury to ask for perjury indictments.

O'Brien, his legs crippled by three bullet wounds, was ordered to remain in the courthouse. He was shot July 21 at Second and C streets southeast while talking to Carpenter. Behrle, who had left the pair a few moments before, was forced into a car filled with armed men and forced to show them where O'Brien could be found.

"We always have a lot of trouble in Washington," Goldstein told the jury," but fortunately up until the present case we have had no 'fingering' of persons, no taking of victims for a ride, no shooting of men in the streets by gunmen riding in black sedans.

O'Brien Called "Liar."

"I would say frankly that when these men shot O'Brien they did little damage, but the shooting occurred on a public street where anyone might have been hit.

"Only the law can settle disputes and the only way to prevent these gang shootings is to find each and every one of these defendants guilty."

Girl, 19, Arrested In Fatal Beating

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 8 (U.P.).—An attractive, 19-year-old business girl was arrested today on a warrant charging her with the brutal automobile-crank murder of Mrs. Ruth Lee Burrows, beaten to death on a lonely beach road October 19.

The girl, Pearl Lloyd, was a former business partner of the slain woman.

Mrs. Burrows was murdered after being abducted while en route with her husband to a nearby beach. Burrows told police he and his wife picked up a hitch-hiker on their way to the beach, later stopping at a roadside stand for refreshments. When he left the car, he said, the hitch-hiker sped away with Mrs. Burrows in the machine. The next day the body of his wife was found.

Irish Threaten to Block York

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, Dec. 8.—The Irish Free State threatened tonight to make use of a legal "joker" and prevent the Duke of York from ascending the throne of England in event of King Edward's abdication.

The United Press learned authoritatively that a grave political situation, involving all the far-flung British dominions, hangs upon a reported warning that the Free State Dail (Parliament) would refuse to pass necessary legislation approving the Duke of York as King.

Under the statute of Westminster, passed by Parliament in 1931 to strengthen the 700-year-old Magna Charta, it was provided any one of the six dominions or the Irish Free State could block accession of a King after an abdication.

The official representative of one of the largest dominions told the United Press informal warning has been received from persons close to Eamon de Valera, President of the Free State.

Two Lawyers, Gynecologist Fly To Mrs. Simpson's Cannes Haven

Cannes, France (Wednesday), Dec. 9.—Mrs. Wallis Simpson's divorce lawyers arrived here today after a fast journey by air and automobile from London, accompanied by Dr. Douglas Kirkwood, her physician.

Lord Brownlow, spokesman for the American-born divorcee, insisted the lawyers had not been summoned by Mrs. Simpson, but had come here to discuss details of closing her London house. She does not intend to return to London for a long time, he added.

Presence of Kirkwood started speculation that Mrs. Simpson might have collapsed—although she posed for photographs yesterday—but Lord Brownlow insisted the doctor had made the trip to take care of Theodore Goddard, one of the attorneys. Goddard and Kirkwood were accompanied by Sydney Barrow, a member of the London law firm which handled Mrs. Simpson's divorce case in the Ipswich Assizes.

Newspapermen, skepitcal that a physician should fly all that distance merely to keep an eye on an air passenger, wrote a letter to Lord Brownlow, asking for a fuller explanation, and sent it up to the villa where Mrs. Simpson is in seclusion. Lord Brownlow came to the villa gates and said:

"Gentlemen, I wish to thank you heartily for the letter you sent me. I give you my word of honor that the arrival of Dr. Kirkwood with Mr. Gooddard has nothing to do with Mrs. Simpson.

"I did not know they were coming until 7 o'clock last night. I learned that Mr. Goddard was coming at his own request to discuss with Mrs. Simpson the details of closing her town house in London. She has no intention of going back to London for some time. Mr. Goddard did not communicate with me and he did not notify us immediately of his arrival.

"A Personal Friend."

"Later Mr. Goddard assured me that Dr. Kirkwood is a personal friend who is a practitioner in Sloane street. Mr. Goddard said that, since he was in poor health and unaccustomed to flying, Dr. Kirkwood and Mr. Barron accompanied him. Dr. Kirkwood is not coming to the villa, and he will not see Mrs. Simpson at all. His presence here has no connection with her. He is going to Monte Carlo tomorrow."

Mrs. Simpson was said to have talked on the telephone Tuesday with King Edward.

She agreed to grant repeated requests for pict res provided there would be only two photographers present—one representing Anglo-American agencies and the other French organizations.

[Close friends of Mrs. Simpson said today she is determined to marry the King despite her offer to sacrifice her love to save him Britain's throne, the Associated Press reported.—Editor's note.]

Edith Maxwell Retrial to Open At Wise Today

New Defense Is Planned in Effort to Refute Murder Charges.

By Edward T. Folliard.

A Staff Correspondent

Wise, Va., Dec. 8.—A higher court having ruled that she was denied justice the first time, Edith Maxwell, 22, goes on trial here for the second time tomorrow on a charge of killing Trigg Maxwell, her blacksmith father. The Commonwealth of Virginia says she killed him with a slipper during a quarrel.

The scene will be the same, the cast almost the same, but the indications are tonight that the plot (at least, as written by the defense) will be vastly different.

Charles Henry Smith, noted Alexandria criminal attorney, engaged by The Washington Post to defend Miss Maxwell, said tonight that the defense would not even concede Trigg Maxwell was murdered.

He said he would put competent medical experts on the witness stand to prove that Maxwell did not die of the slipper blow.

To some of the natives who followed Edith's first trial, news of Attorney Smith's plan of battle seemed fantastic. The truth is, however, this has been Smith's plan from the time he took over the case last January, three months after Edith's first trial, when she was found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to 25 years in the State penitentiary.

"It is my opinion," Smith said tonight, "that Trigg Maxwell died of a heart attack. He had been a heavy drinker since he was a youngster. I believe that in the excitement of his tussle with Edith, he suffered a heart attack.

"We may not be able to show that. We don't have to.

"We do expect to put medical men on the stand who will show conclusively that he could not have been murdered, that the slipper could not have killed him.

"What are the facts. Edith Maxwell returned home late to find her father in an ugly mood. When she went through his room to get quilts for her bed, he attacked her. He threatened her with a butcher knife, dragged her by the hair and yelled that he would break her neck; she fell to the floor. She felt a slipper under her. She reached

Girl Dancer Attacked by Lion In Baltimore, Is Critically Hurt

By the United Press.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 8.—A maddened 300-pound lion attacked and seriously injured Gladys Cote, girl performer at the Hippodrome Theater, late today while the audience looked on horrified.

She was rescued by Noble Hamiter, lion tamer, who carried her bleeding and unconscious from the big cage in which she danced before seven lions. The audience remained in their seats, too terrified to move.

The Lion leaped without warning. Miss Cote, whose stage name is Madison Mazone, screamed and tried to fight the beast off. Its weight bore her to the floor. She was bitten on the arms, legs and torso.

Hamiter fired a revolver containing blanks, but the enraged beast refused to retreat. He then grappled with the animal and succeeded in driving it back. He leaped to Miss Cote's prostrate form, snatched it up and ran from the cage.

The audience was deprived of this part of the drama when the stage curtains were drawn.

The actress was taken to University Hospital and the show proceeded.

Sixteen other girls participate in the act in which Miss Cote does a feature dance. Their screams mingled with the revolver shots as the curtains were drawn and Hamiter fought his grim battle.

As the curtain swung to, the beast was furiously clawing the girl and Hamiter was advancing, firing his revolver.

ABDICATION HINT DISCOUNTED AS LAWYERS FLY TO CANNES

Question of Succession Looms Large Among British Leaders as Showdown in Empire Crisis Approaches.

Special Dispatch to The Washington Post.

London (Wednesday) Dec. 9.—King Edward has decided to marry his American friend Wallis Warfield Simpson, of Baltimore—and keep the throne—it was believed in the best informed circles here this morning.

This belief was regarded as especially significant in view of reports widely published and distributed to the effect Edward had decided to abdicate. Announcement of such intentions, the reports said, was to be made today.

The King and Prime Minister Baldwin had dinner together last night, followed by a five-hour conference. At the conclusion of their meeting, Baldwin emerged with a smile on his face for the first time since the crisis arose, and it was the belief of persons high in British councils that a satisfactory solution had been reached.

Informed circles also pointed to these highly dramatic incidents and theories which acquired importance during a day and night of suspense in the British Commonwealth of Nations:

1. Mrs. Simpson's attorneys, Theodore Goddard and Sidney Barron, who represented her in her divorce proceedings, flew suddenly last night from England to Cannes. They were accompanied by Dr. Douglas Kirkwood, a leading gynecologist.

2. It was emphasized the lawyers were there only to arrange for the closing of Mrs. Simpson's London home. And that the doctor was there only as a personal friend of one attorney who feared air sickness on his first flight.

Plane Flight Called Unnecessary.

3. It was pointed out by others arrangements for closing the London home need not require a flight by plane by one not accustomed to planes; that a few phone calls and negotiations through Mrs. Simpson's aunt, or through representatives of the Crown, might accomplish as much.

4. It was the strongest belief that Prime Minister Baldwin wanted most of all to reassure the commonwealth, that he wanted to assure the public that the crisis is past. Abdication at the moment, it was believed, would do everything but that.

5. It was added that marriage to Mrs. Simpson, even if abdication were necessary, could not be accomplished for several months, due to the divorce decree. Further, abdication, it was believed, would not be announced until the members of the commonwealth had an opportunity to provide legislation relative to succession. They have not had this opportunity.

6. One member of the commonwealth could bring about disunion by refusing to pass legislation providing for succession. The Irish Free State has made known a threat to bring about such disunity.

Succession a Major Question.

7. Great opposition to Mrs. Simpson's marriage developed in some quarters because of the question of succession. If the line of succession could not be continued through King Edward and his queen, it would pass automatically to the children of the Duke and Duchess of York, on the death of Edward. Some saw in the unusual air flight by a leading gynecologist to Cannes a means of eliminating much opposition to the marriage—without abdication.

Meanwhile the nation and the world awaited the announcement promised by Prime Minister Baldwin—an announcement the best informed opinion believed would simply reassure Britons all was well.

Rumors of Abdication Are Rampant

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London (Wednesday), Dec. 9.—King Edward VIII has decided to abdicate, a source of information that usually is unimpeachable told the United Press today.

Important figures in London's financial community also understood that the King made known his decision to Prime Minister Baldwin in a five-hour conference at Fort Belvedere yesterday.

Informed persons said announcement of the abdication will be made in the House of Commons, which meets at 2:45 p. m. (9:45 a. m., Eastern standard time) today. The British cabinet will meet at 11 a. m. (6 a. m. Eastern standard time).

Members of the royal family were reported to be heartbroken. It was assumed the Duke of York will ascend the throne in event of abdication, but today at Fort Belvedere a lengthy conference was in progress between Edward VIII and his youngest brother, the Duke of Kent.

Kent Returns to Fort.

Kent and the Duke of York dined with the King Tuesday night—as did Baldwin—and then the two dukes and the prime minister returned to London. Shortly after midnight,

he said, "more money will be available," pointed out that $500,000,000 annual cost of the program had not as yet been appropriated by Congress, and that "the program we have drafted is dependent upon the action of Congress."

The cautious but direct move toward production control was disclosed with the simple announcement that a limit on corn acreage would be established for farms "in those parts of the North-Central region and Kansas, where corn is the major crop."

Big Surplus Feared.

The AAA experts explained that in the past farmers were able to receive diversion payments for shifting land producing wheat, oats, barley, rye or other soil-depleting crops to corn. Fearing a terrific corn surplus, they said, corn was placed in the list of general soil-depleting basic crops and the acreage limited.

The officials said that, with good crop weather a corn crop of 2,500,000,000 bushels is possible this year, which might throw hog prices "out of line." They termed the new corn acreage limit essential in preventing violent fluctuation of corn-hog prices.

In the program, the plan of establishing soil depleting bases for farms has been continued, with these bases used as yardsticks to measure diversion from soil-depleting to soil-conserving crops.

Payments for shifts from general depleting crops and cotton, tobacco, and peanuts will be continued, as well as payments to sugar and rice producers who participate.

With the regional administration set-up to continue in the same manner, administrative expenses of county agricultural conservation associations will be deducted from payments to farmers of those counties. The range program is to be extended from the Western States to range lands in Western parts of the Southern and North Central regions. The allowances and vegetable growers will be increased.

Any producer will be given an opportunity to earn at least $20, as against a $10 minimum last year.

In the case of the corn acreage limit, a deduction will be made for each acre over the limit at the rate paid for diversion from the general soil-depleting base, as determined by the county committees. The soil-conserving base for Western and North Central farms will be the total acreage of crop land minus the total acreage in all soil-depleting bases, while in all other regions it will be the average acreage of soil conserving crops "over a representative period."

Diversion payments, for shifts of land from the general soil-depleting base, will average slightly less than the $10 average paid this year, according to H. R. Tolley, AAA administrator. Two-thirds of this payment is made for shifts from soil-depleting crops and one-third for corresponding increases in the acreage of soil-conserving crops.

The rates, briefly, include:

An average of $6 per acre for each acre diverted from the general soil-depleted base, with a limit of 15 per cent of the general soil-depleting base set for the payment. In this connection the rate for farms on which a corn acreage is established will be increased 5 per cent.

Diverted Acreage Base.

There also will be an average of $3 per acre for increases above the soil-conserving base, with the limit being the acreage diverted for payment from the general soil-depleting base. Again, this rate is increased 5 per cent in farms with a corn-acreage limit.

In the North, East Central and in most of the Southern regions the two payments are combined in one of $9 per acre, with a deduction of $3 per acre for failure to mtach diversion with increased acreage of soil-conserving crops.

On the whole, the diversion payments will be from 5 to 10 per cent less than those last year on farms where corn and wheat are major crops, and will average approximately 5 per cent less than those of last year on farms where crops with special bases are the major crops.

A probable limit of 54,200,000 acres was set upon corn planting by co-operating farmers in the major producing States, according to department estimates. This compared with an acreage of 54,500,000 in the same area this year and 59,000,000 in 1932-33.

He planned to entrain at New Orleans tomorrow night or Thursday and return to Topeka.

AAA Corn Crop Curtailment Plan Disguised as Soil Conservation in 1937 Program.

By Franklyn Waltman

OVER in the Agriculture Department they apparently subscribe to the old adage that there is more than one way to skin a cat.

WALTMAN.

As revealed in the AAA soil conservation program for next year, the department's chieftains apparently believe there are ways to control farm production besides paying benefits for acreage reduction.

The latter was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. But the AAA appears to be making a back-door approach to crop control by attempting to establish a limit on corn acreage this year on farms in the North Central region and in Kansas, where corn is the major crop.

Since it is unconstitutional to pay benefits for crop control, the AAA has devised a scheme whereby benefits are paid for something else—soil conservation—but, and here is the fly in the ointment, the farmer does not get the full benefits unless he conforms to the AAA limitation on corn. If the plan works with corn it undoubtedly will be expanded to cover other crops later on.

It is an ingenious scheme and those who devised it feel confident it is tamper-proof, chiefly because they do not see how anyone can get a case involving this issue before the Supreme Court. AAA officials, however, are apparently a little nervous over the public reception of this experiment and they are not doing much talking about it.

Easily the outstanding feature of the 1937 soil conservation program, first reference to this attempt at crop control was contained on page 5 of a mimeographed announcement. Every newspaperman made it the lead of his story. The publicity men of the AAA knew the importance of this new feature, but they did not want to emphasize it.

Asked about this scheme, AAA spokesmen insist it is all part of soil conservation and when pressed on the specific limitation of next year's corn crop, they admit that the element of production control is involved but contend that it is but incidental to the soil conservation objective. They argue soil conservation cannot be practiced without getting some measure of crop control and vice versa.

Nevertheless, announcement of the 1937 soil conservation program marked the first direct step taken by the Federal Government since the Supreme Court declared the AAA unconstitutional to establish a limit on a given crop and to achieve that objective by monetary suasion.

This is the way the AAA hopes to attain controlled corn production next year: Under the soil-conservation program the AAA will make payments of $6 or $3 an acre for diversion from soil depleting crops, subject to limitations and conditions. This was the practice followed this year.

Now under the new plan a bonus of 5 per cent will be paid on farms for which a corn acreage limit is established. But if the corn acreage limit is exceeded, a deduction will be made for each acre over the limit at the rate paid for diversion from the general soil-depleting base.

The corn acreage limit for each farm in the corn belt will be made to conform to a limitation for the entire region which will be slightly smaller than the total acreage planted to corn this year. Thus it is estimated that 54,500,000 acres were planted to corn this year. The limit set for next year's crop will be about 54,000,000 acres, a reduction of roughly 1 per cent under this year, but approximately 5,000,000 acres less than the 1932-33 average, which constituted the old AAA base figure.

Any farmer exceeding the corn acreage quota allowed to him by his local committee, therefore, would be penalized at the rate of $6 an acre for his excess corn acreage. This sum would be deducted from whatever sum he is entitled to receive under soil conservation benefits.

The scheme does not touch the farmer who refuses to participate in the soil conservation program. But it prevents a farmer from profiting fully or at all, from the conservation program unless he is willing to keep his corn acreage within the limit set by the Government. The penalty of $6 an acre is a substantial differential and in many cases may well be the difference between profit or loss on an acre of corn.

The intention of the AAA to expand this scheme to cover other crops is seen in an unexplained paragraph in the announcement of the program to the effect that "deductions will be made if 1937 acreage of cotton, tobacco, peanuts or general crops exceeds the base established for these crops on any farm."

This and the corn limitation announcement strongly suggests that crop control, and not preservation of the soil, is becoming the chief objective of the conservation program with its annual expenditure of $500,000,000. It is an experiment well worth watching, for usually in such matters one step leads to another.

Aldrich Terms Reemployment Business Duty

Urges Occupational Study, Assails Corporation Savings Taxes.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 8.—Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank of New York, tonight called re-employment of the unemployed the "primary duty of business men."

He urged hiring of as many idle as the Nation's commercial and industrial interests could absorb and advocated a Federal census of the jobless to guide the employers.

"An authoritative study must be made concerning the former occupations of those now on relief rolls and concerning the comparative amount of unemployment which exists at the present time in agriculture, transportation, the service groups, the professions and in various lines of industry," he said in an address before the Illinois Manufacturers Association.

Says Information Needed.

"What we, as business men, need to know before making a definite commitment, is what the recipients of relief were doing before they became unemployed, and what chance there is of finding or creating jobs for them in industry and business to replace those they have lost.

"Here is the most important problem before the country today," he said.

"I suggest that we should all urge the making of such a study by the Federal Government. Once the results of this study are available, business can go forward more intelligently to do its part in bearing its share of the burden."

Assails Corporate Tax.

Aldrich said tax boosts on income in the higher brackets had led to a "great scarcity of venturesome capital" needed to finance new inventions and to develop new industries.

He contended the tax on corporate savings "might have been useful in 1933 or 1934," but "can be gravely harmful in 1937 and 1938."

"Already it has led to the reduction of lines of credit to some corporations," he said, "and has operated to check expansion of plant and equipment in others."

The banker advised the manufacturers to "work earnestly for the rapid extension of the foreign trade policy of the Administration" as "the great road to world peace."

40 Die in Collapse Of School's Floor

Lisbon, Dec. 8 (U.P.).—Forty persons were killed and many injured tonight when the floor of a school room collapsed in Porto de Moz, 70 miles north of Lisbon. Five hundred persons were in the room when the floor gave way.

Relief Pledged For All in Need By WPA Chief

Hopkins Explains Slash in Rolls, But Declares Care Will Continue.

Stressing repeatedly that no person in the country who is in need of relief will be dropped from the Federal work-relief program this winter, Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins announced last night that:

A shift of 250,000 drought-area families from WPA to the Resettlement Administration is now in progress and will shortly be completed.

WPA employment amounted to 2,478,042 persons during the last week in November.

This, a decline of 104,510 from the first week in November, was chiefly due to the shift to RA of the rural cases.

A deficiency appropriation will be necessary in the first weeks of Congress to carry the WPA to the end of this fiscal year, June 30, 1937.

Every job possible in nonrelief and administrative bureaus will be eliminated from WPA at once.

Every person with other income sources, still on WPA rolls, will be dropped at once.

Hopkins, however, told reporters at a press conference that no one in the country deserving of relief need fear that the Government will refuse his case. He emphasized that he is not worried over lack of funds, although he added:

"Obviously, we are getting down to where we are scraping the bucket."

Hopkins called the conference to dispel confusion over the future course of WPA. Criticism of recent cuts in relief rolls impelled the move, it was said. He cleared up this point by stressing the necessary dropping of nonrelief employees and administrative assistants with other sources of income.

He said:

"There seems to be an impression that any downward adjustment in WPA is the beginning of demobilization. This is not so. * * * Whatever funds are now available to the WPA are going to be equalized among the several States. * * * There is no basis for the belief that we will abandon the theater projects. We are merely cutting out the white-collar nonrelief-roll workers."

He struck at the reports of labor shortages in various trades in the country with the phrase:

"Only some chiseling employers who want to slash wages or object to high wages spread that propaganda about a labor shortage."

Minister Calls U. S. A 'Drunken Nation'

By the Associated Press.

A statement that the United States is on the way to being "the most drunken nation in the world" was made today by Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, executive secretary of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, the Methodist Episcopal Church.

American history, Dr. Cherrington said, failed to show "anything like such an overwhelming rush by men, women and youth toward the use of alcoholic beverages and the worship of beverage alcohol interests as dictators of style, habit, custom, etiquette and policy of government as that which characterized the last three years—the first three years under repeal."

French Troops Guard Plant After Rioting

Lille, France, Dec. 8 (AP).—A heavy force of mobile guards tonight was thrown around a motor plant after a clash between 200 strikers and more than 100 non-strikers in which one of the company directors was among those injured by thrown stones. The strikers still occupied the factory while the non-strikers and spectators were kept outside the guards' lines.

After the clash the employers association charged Communist strikers were preparing to blow up Lille factories whose owners have refused to meet their demands.

Payne Sues Radio Publishers Here

By the Associated Press.

George Henry Payne, member of the Communications Commission, has filed a $100,000 suit against Broadcasting Publications, Inc., and two of its officers, charging them with libel.

Named in the suit, in Federal District Court here, were Martin Codel, publisher, and Sol Taishoff, editor, of one of the corporation's publications, Broadcasting and Broadcast Advertising.

Their criticism arose out of Payne's interrogation of Powel Crosley, jr., president of the Crosley Radio Corporation, during a hearing on proposed revision of broadcasting regulations.

The commissioner, a frequent critic of what he terms a "radio lobby" in Washington, had questioned Crosley regarding the policy of his station at Cincinnati toward radio time for political parties and for manufacturers of products competing with those of companies in which Crosley was interested.

Jones Says RFC 'Won't Lose Dollar'

Asserting that when its books are finally closed, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will "not have lost a dollar," Jesse H. Jones, its chairman, said yesterday 68 cents of every dollar expended on its own responsibility already had been repaid.

The RFC has lent $6,308,871,407 since February 2, 1932.

The figures are exclusive of directed disbursements to governmental agencies and expenditures for relief, which brought the total to $8,999,534,878.

The RFC, which started operations in the Hoover Administration, lent money to banks, railroads and industrial enterprises and otherwise sought to cushion the shock of depression.

Jury Convicts Warring Gang In O'Brien Case

and Charles Ford earlier emphasized to the jury that the Government had not produced "one scintilla of evidence" against the accused men.

Even the victim of the shooting on the witness stand had said that none of the men arraigned before him took part in the shooting, Whelan emphasized.

Ford called O'Brien a "liar" and urged the jury not to give any weight to the statements he made to police in Providence Hospital and repudiated when he took the witness stand.

The crowded courtroom expected a thrill when the court reconvened yesterday and it was not long in coming. First witness summoned was "Country" Carpenter, Broad shouldered and pleasant of face there was little about his demeanor as he ambled to the stand to support his reputation in the underworld as a "bad man."

Carpenter began to lose his composure, however, when he faced the six warring mobsters seated in a semicircle around him. Their eyes, cold and hard, sought to meet his.

"Did you see these men here," said Goldstein, indicating the defendants, "when O'Brien was shot."

"Country" fleetingly surveyed the accused men, shuffled uneasily and with six pairs of eyes boring into him, replied:

"No, sir; I did not."

"Country," under questioning, said he did not remember hearing any shots at the time O'Brien was shot and was sure he had not seen "Monty" Montgomery at the wheel of one of the gang cars.

Memory Is Poor.

Goldstein then was given permission to impeach his own witness and the prosecutor asked if he remembered a conversation in the District Attorney's office Friday. To freshen "Country's" memory, Goldstein reminded the witness that he, Goldstein, Lieut. Clement Cox and Carpenter were present at the time.

"Country" wracked his memory and recalled the meeting, but said he couldn't remember anything about it.

"Do you mean to say," shouted Goldstein, "that you don't remember telling us only last Friday that "Monty" Montgomery was driving one of the cars."

"Country's" eyes shifted to the semi-circle of defendants and back to Goldstein.

"No, I don't remember," he said.

"Didn't you say you heard Montgomery cry out 'let him have it,'" pressed Goldstein.

"I can't remember," said "Country."

Memory Organ Fails.

Goldstein plied the nervous witness with questions as to whether he had not described in detail the clothing Montgomery was wearing, but to each question "Country" replied:

"I can't remember."

Justice Gordon was sitting forward in his chair and his face was growing florid as the questioning proceeded.

The climax came when Goldstein produced a statement implicating the defendants and signed by Carpenter.

"Country" studied the signature and said it was his alright and blandly added that he could not remember having made any of the assertions set forth in the statement.

"Lock him up," said Justice Gordon.

"Spike" Behrle, pasty faced, thin and nervous, came next. Red splotches appeared on his cheeks and even his forehead when he met the hard stare of te defendants.

"Spike" remembered his name alright and even remembered that on the night of the shooting Montgomery picked him up in his car at Second and East Capitol streets and drove to the scene of the shooting.

Goldstein was impressed and he asked:

"Did you see anything happen or hear anything happen after you got there?"

"Spike" winced at the question and the flush on his face deepened.

"No, sir, not a thing," said "Spike."

After that "Spike's" memory was almost as bad as "Country's."

Exasperated, Goldstein produced a statement Behrle had signed at police headquarters. It implicated all of the men on trial.

"Yes, I signed the statement, but I don't remember anything that's in it. The police kept me up all night. They made me sign it."

Defense Plea Rejected.

"Spike's" memory failed when he was asked to name a policeman who had made him sign it, and Judge Gordon leaned forward.

"Lock him up," he said.

"Spike" seemed rather glad to get out of the courtroom.

Lieut. Cox said he took Warring, Sweeney, Montgomery and Ware to Providence Hospital, where O'Brien identified them as members of the gang that attacked him.

Virginia State Policeman Harry L. Robertson told of arresting Bond and Tear at Falmouth, Va., after receiving a description of the car that fled from the scene of the shooting.

Ralph May, Navy Yard employe, who obtained the first two license numbers of the fleeing car said he saw three men knock O'Brien to the ground and shoot him after a voice from the car shouted "let him have it." He could not identify the men, May said.

"I Can't Remember" Witnesses Jailed

McPherson Trial Hears Gang Hint

Los Angeles, Dec. 8 (AP).—Testimony of mysterious financial dealings with "the underworld" was injected by Aimee Semple McPherson today into preliminary proceedings on a $1,080,000 slander suit filed against the comely evangelist by her associate pastor.

Sister Aimee, at a deposition hearing, declared her associate pastor, Rheba Crawford, once offered to share $130,000 of underworld money with her. The former "Angel of Broadway" declared on this occasion, Sister Aimee testified, it was policy to "kick them in the shins and keep kicking them until they give up—or give a contribution to Angelus Temple."

Mrs. Shepherd made her stage debut when she was 13 years old and became an ingenue in the late Charles Frohman's Empire Theater Stock Co. in New York City.

Restaurateurs Told to Satisfy Patrons' Whims

Snack of Rattlesnake Gives Delegates Scare at Breakfast.

When a man (or woman) walks into a restaurant, scowls at the check girl who offers to take his hat, refuses to allow the hostess to find him a table and growls at the waitress because the eggs are 15 seconds overdone, the management should cultivate his patronage—because they may be important folk.

This was the advice given yesterday to convening restaurateurs by Frank Romer, of the Washington advertising service bearing his name.

"Most great men, from Lloyd George and Mussolini all the way back to Clemenceau, Schumann, Caesar and beyond, were food cranks," said Romer.

Restaurant men should remember, he said in his address at the Mayflower Hotel, that the fellow who spurns the check girl isn't necessarily a tightwad and the one who will have only the table next to the wall may have reasons for his idiosyncrasy.

"Courtesy for Impatience."

The one may once have lost a new fedora in a checkroom, the other may insist upon a certain seat because the light falls just right or it is not within range of the electric fan, Romer said.

Therefore, he advised delegates to the regional convention of the National Restaurant Association, let the host return courtesy for impatience and tact for insolence, even if the grumpy customer does not turn out to be someone "important."

An experimental stunt engineered by John W. Ebersole, White Plains, N. Y., restaurant operator, almost disrupted the "early birds' breakfast" which opened yesterday's program.

He brought in a tray filled with delicate canapes.

"Help yourselves, gentlemen," said Mr. Ebersole.

After 20 or more of the culinary experts had sampled the tidbits the New Yorker asked their opinions.

Only Rattlesnake.

"Delicious," volunteered Emil J. Fried, a Philadelphia proprietor, "tastes like dark meat of chicken."

"Say, you've got something here," came from another breakfaster. "What is it?"

"Canned rattlesnake meat," replied Ebersole. "Not bad, huh?"

"Oh!" moaned Mr. Fried.

Their consternation, agreed nonparticipants, was due to their having indulged unwittingly in a food which has not caught on generally rather than to their having been shown up as judges of ingredients.

The convention will close today, with speeches at the morning and afternoon sessions and a banquet tonight honoring R. D. Clark, of Cleveland, president, and directors of the National Restaurant Association.

Trees Will Screen Mt. Vernon Road's Railroad Tracks

A screen of trees a mile and a quarter long will keep a Washington railroad yard from offending the aesthetic sense of beauty-searching tourists traveling the Mount Vernon Memorial boulevard.

Frank T. Gartside, assistant superintendent of National Capital Parks, yesterday announced he has advertised for bids for planting a line of 700 trees. These, he said, will separate landscaped scenery on either side of the boulevard from ugly industry as presented by the adjoining railroad yard.

The tree line will begin in the vicinity of the WJSV radio transmitter and run along the tracks of the Southern Railroad for a mile and a quarter in the direction of the Capital.

National Capital Parks has spent some time and money in beautifying park lands along the highway that leads thousands of tourists annually to the Nation's shrine of its first President at Mount Vermnon. It doen't want the smoke and dirt of industry spoiling its carefully laid out scenery, Gartside pointed out.

Snell Pledges Party to Work For U. S. Good

By the Associated Press.

Representative Snell, of New York, House Republican leader, pledged yesterday that his party members would "work in conformity with present-day thought and progress."

Puffing on a cigar, Snell tilted back in a chair at a press conference and told reporters it would not be the policy of the House Republican leadership to oppose legislation merely because it was sponsored by a Democratic Administration.

He said the position of Republican Congressmen rested on a "pretty firm foundation" of nearly 19,000,000 votes or about 44 per cent of the total cast for Congressmen.

As to specific measures, Snell said, the Republicans must wait until they have had a chance to examine Administration proposals.

The New Yorker said he expected to assemble House Republicans for a meeting about January 4. He said he knew of no opposition to continuation of himself as minority leader.

Asked about the assertion of John Hamilton, national chairman, that party leadership should rest with Congressional chieftains, Snell said he thought that was right. He said, too, he believed Hamilton would be continued as party chairman when the national committee meets in Chicago this month.

In a formal statement the Republican leader said his forces would insist on free debate on legislation as "essential to good government."

"To relax the regular constitutional processes of constructive legislative inquiry," he said, "would be to abandon the United States to the reaction of one-party government. But on this point the Nation may be assured—there will be no surrender of minority rights, no abdication of minority responsibilities."

Army's Airmen Aid Philippine Flood Victims

Many Thousands Reported Dead and Missing in 100-Mile Valley.

By the Associated Press.

Manila, Dec. 8.—Army authorities assigned fighting planes to relief duty tonight to rush aid into the flood-stricken Cagayan Valley, where they reported thousands of dead and other thousands missing in perhaps the worst deluge in Philippine history.

Incomplete reports showed at least 54 villages inundated, whole families wiped out, crops and livestock washed away and untold damage inflicted by water that rushed down the treacherous Cagayan River Friday as the aftermath of a typhoon.

Area 100 Miles Long.

Army air service relief was ordered when it became known the waters covered a rich faming area more than 100 miles long. Regular communication systems were wiped out.

Initial reports showed 20 bodies recovered in the village of Cagayan.

Fliers expected to find a panorama of death and destruction in the peaceful 50-mile-wide valley, inhabited by more than 28,000 persons.

Planes were groomed for a take-off at dawn tomorrow, while Red Cross and government authorities marshaled all possible reinforcements. The fliers will survey the flood area.

Isolated Section.

Officials feared the full toll of the flood might never be known because of the suddenness and severity of the flood.

So isolated was the stricken area that a former provincial military commander required four days to fight his way to an outlying point from which he informed the world of the disaster.

The flood came upon the valley as the result of torrential rains accompanying a typhoon which whirled across the Philippines December 2.

Gullickson Speaker.

Ira Gullickson, of the Metropolitan Police Department will speak at the regular meeting of the Washington Photographic Society today at 8 p. m. in the Mount Pleasant Branch of the Public Library.

President Gets Plan to Avert Sailor Strikes

Federal Shipping Bureaus Would Replace Present Hiring Halls.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

A detailed program proposing rigid control of seamen's unemployment to avert maritime strikes has been submitted to President Roosevelt, the United Press learned last night.

The plan was tendered the President the day before he left for South America. It was drafted by a high Government official who insists on remaining anonymous because of the part he may play in settlement of the current marine walkout.

Its main objective would be establishment of Federal shipping bureaus in principal American ports, replacing present hiring halls which are a cardinal point of contention in the current Pacific Coast strike. The program is understood to be designed to bring pressure to force settlement of the West Coast dispute if it has not been conciliated when Mr. Roosevelt returns December 14.

Under the new proposals, marine offices would be set up initially to distribute thousands of seamen's discharge books, required under the Copeland safety at sea act, passed by the last Congress.

The author of the plan has suggested, it was learned, that these offices then be expanded to set up a strict system of Federal control of seamen's employment.

The United Press was told that the International Seamen's Union, which has opposed the Atlantic Coast rank and file strike as illegal, favors the plan.

At present the Commerce Department's Bureau of Navigation and Marine Inspection operates six bureaus, which are admittedly ineffectual because of the hiring hall system. They are in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk and Houston.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Concert by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy with Mischa Elman as soloist in Constitution Hall Tuesday night. Program: Eine Faust Overture (Wagner), Violin Concerto in D major (Chaikovski), Symphony No. 2 in D major (Brahms).

Whatever disappointment one felt over the fact that the Philadelphia Orchestra, on its second visit this season, did not bring as the major work on its program something less familiar than the second symphony of Brahms was gradually dissipated and turned into appreciative enjoyment by the stirring performance given by Eugene Ormandy and the splendid instrumental corps so consentiently responsive to his direction. It was a reading virile in motivation, incessantly poetic in implication, and quickened throughout by an intense vitality. It so roused the audience that the ovational thanks extended to three calls for Mr. Ormandy and as many standing acknowledgments by the orchestra.

Once one has succumbed to the peculiar rhetoric of Brahms, to his alternations of lovely lyricism with involutions or thought, to his changes from simplicity of speech to a Browningesque crabbedness of grammar, it is difficult to make a choice between his four symphonies. Now one and now another seems to take precedence over the others as his masterwork, and it is usually the one which is being heard that crowds the other three back.

It is not without reason that the D major symphony has been styled by some admirers the "pastoral" of the rugged Johannes. Certainly there are many passages that suggest the peace of a contemplated landscape, the serenity of undulant hills under a cloudless sky and the quietude of nemoral shade. But all is not happiness, nor is idyllic ease the continuous burden of the music. There may be no physical storms, no tempests of the air, but there are inner perturbations of the spirit. It is music in which meditations are interrupted by emotional conflicts, in which security is shaken by questionings.

With his amber tone as glowing and translucent as ever, Mischa Elman gave a fine and persuasive reading of the Chaikovski concerto. His technical assurance was disturbed only once, when he was baffled by a tricky scale in the Auer cadenza, but that was only a tiny flaw in a perfected performance. He was aided by the most deliactely balanced conducting of the orchestral background that I have ever witnessed. The manner in which the dynamics were handled, the colors adjusted, and the proportions maintained was more than a feat of directorial sympathy; it was a tribute of one violinist to another.

The time has long gone by when pedantic and rule-bound critics objected to the irregularities of the Chaikovski concerto. Those very sections which were once matters of offense have become the passages most attractive because of their abounding vitality and their Russian flavor.

Wagner's overture to "Faust," one of early works which has escaped the scouring of innumerable performances, is interesting not only for its intrinsic values, but also as a fragment of a projected symphony. It leads one into pleasant speculation as to what the symphony would have been like, had the "eternal feminine" been admitted, and stirs the wish that Wagner had composed a Faust opera against which the prettiness and melodramatic heroics of Gounod would have striven in vain.

King to Wed and Keep Throne, Report

however, the Duke of Kent returned to Fort Belvedere, riding on the front seat with his chauffeur.

The woman who caused all this stir in Britain's royal circles, Mrs. Wallis Simpson, rested in a villa at Cannes. Nearby, in the Miramar Hotel, were the two lawyers who won a decree nisi of divorce for her in Ipswich Assizes—Theodore Goddard and Sydney Barron. They arrived at Cannes today after a hard trip from London by air and automobile. With them was Mrs. Simpson's physician, Dr. Douglas Kirkwood.

Lord Brownlow, Mrs. Simpson's spokesman, came down to the gates of the villa today and told newspapermen "on my word of honor" that the physician was there only because Goddard was slightly ill and did not want to undertake an airplane trip without a medical man being present. Lord Brownlow said Kirkwood would not see Mrs. Simpson. He added, Goddard and Barron were in Cannes only to make arrangements for the closing of Mrs. Simpson's London house at Cumberland terrace.

"She has no intention of going back to London for some time," Lord Brownlow added.

Laborites to Meet.

The Labor Party's executive committee was called to meet at 2 p. m. today, 45 minutes before opening of Commons. Maj. Clement Attlee, leader of the Labor Party's bloc in Commons, is expected to advise its members then of the announcement Baldwin will make. It was understood Baldwin's announcement will be made in reply to a question by Attlee.

[Some authoritative observers said they were convinced Baldwin may end his entire uproar with a simple announcement to Commons that "the crisis is over," the Associated Press reported. These observers felt the Prime Minister might answer questions from the floor in Commons today, but that no final statement would then be forthcoming.—Editor's note.]

There have been reports for the last two weeks the Duke of York is reluctant to take the throne in event of abdication. He has pleaded imperfect health, lack of training for the high office and lukewarm feeling toward him among certain sections of the British public.

Should he decline the throne in event of Edward's abdication, the succession then would pass to his eldest daughter, Elizabeth, who is 10 years old. A regency would be established and a council of state would rule the British Empire until the girl reached the age of 17. Then she would become "Elizabeth, by the Grace of God, Queen of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions Beyond the Seas, Empress of India and Defender of the Faith."

Empire's Sweetheart.

The words "Queen Elizabeth" are powerful in British history, and there has been much discussion in political quarters in the last 48 hours about the fair-haired little girl, who is the "empire's sweetheart."

The outside world knew nothing today of what was happening behind the thick walls of the castle—built 200 years ago—at Fort Belvedere. There Edward and Kent—said to be the only member of the royal family who has sympathized with the King's desire to marry Mrs. Simpson—talked.

After Baldwin returned to London he conferred with the home secretary, Sir John Simon.

If the King has decided to abdicate, it will be only the start of more trouble for the empire.

There were reports the Irish Free State is ready to block accession to the throne of the Duke of York. It could do so under the statute of Westminster, passed by Parliament in 1931, providing any one of the six dominions or the Irish Free State could prevent a new King from taking the throne after an abdication.

Quarreled With Mother.

The decision which the King was said to have reached today came after days of torturing doubt and indecision, both for himself and the empire. It involved a quarrel between Edward VIII and his mother, Queen Mary, in which she asked him in the name of his late father, King George, to give up Mrs. Simpson and remain on the throne. He refused, and, as a result, Queen Mary was reported to be near collapse.

The announcement of abdication will be jealously guarded until Commons meets this afternoon, informed persons said.

Because of its historic importance, these persons said, the announcement probably will take precedence over the usual period for questions and be made immediately after the opening prayer.

Investigate Revenues.

The King's financial and legal advisers spent yesterday investigating his possible revenues from the Duchy of Cornwall in case of his abdication.

Before last night's conference at Belvedere, Home Secretary Sir John Simon and First Lord of the Admiralty Sir Samuel Hoare, visited Baldwin at 10 Downing street and discussed the crisis.

From there Simon went on to Commons where he was questioned as to whether the government had any further statement to make on the crisis. Baldwin, busied with constant conferences, was not present.

"The Prime Minister regrets that he is unable to reply personally, but there is nothing to say," Simon replied.

The political correspondent of the London Morning Post said today politicians feel King Edward ultimately "may feel himself compelled to abdicate" and "preparations for the distressing contingency of abdication are being made as precautionary measures."

Kingston, Jamaica, Dec. 8 (U.P.).—David Lloyd George, Great Britain's war-time premier, said tonight it will be a "tragedy" if King Edward VIII abdicated his throne.

Lloyd George, here on a holiday after completing his history of the war, has decided to continue his vacation, rather than return to Britain immediately because he believes the "constitutional crisis" is virtually over.

"The King's sympathies and instincts are fundamentally sound," he told the United Press in an interview. "It would be a tragedy if he had to quit the throne, not only for England but for the empire.

"He is a man of remarkable gifts and has all the makings of one of the best Kings the empire ever had.

"I have the greatest respect and admiration for the King and am pained about the situation. I am still hopeful that some means will be found of keeping him in his exalted position."

King Edward Good At Pillow Fighting, Says U. S. Lawyer

By the Associated Press.

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 8.—King Edward VIII, a Buffalo lawyer related today, is a good pillow fighter.

But he was not quite good enough, said Henry Adsit Bull, the lawyer, to stand up for long against Bull's son, Henry, jr., in a pillow fight aboard the liner Berengaria a few years ago. The son, who was then a Harvard student returning from Europe, now is editor of a magazine.

Edward, then Prince of Wales, was on his way to his Canadian ranch. An officer, Bull said, asked Edward if he would like to take part in a pillow fight, in which two opponents faced each other astride a spar and attempted to unseat each other with pillows.

The Prince, Bull said, replied:

"Sure, if you will find me an opponent about my size and weight."

Bull said his son was selected. Prince and student swatted each other so vigorously in the first round that both fell off the spar.

Mrs. Simpson's Lawyers Speed To the Riviera

Gynecologist Accompanies 2 Attorneys; Visit Said to Concern House Sale.

King to her offer of yesterday to withdraw from the situation, which she called "untenable."

Mrs. Simpson's divorce is a decree nisi—a temporary order that cannot be made final until six months have elapsed, in this case, on April 27. Thus there still is time for Mrs. Simpson—if that is the course she has decided upon—to cancel her divorce.

Flew to Marseille.

The two lawyers, members of the firm which handled Mrs. Simpson's divorce case, flew from London to Marseille and tonight were on their way here by automobile.

A decision on the part of Mrs. Simpson to rescind her temporary divorce decree and remain the wife of the Canadian-born broker would bring an abrupt finish to the "world's greatest romance." It would complete her renunciatoin of yesterday in which she offered to give up Edward "if such action would solve the problem."

In London it was said such a surprise development conceivably would explain the urgent flight through bad weather of her lawyers.

A dangerous 1,000-mile flight would not be necessary, it was explained, if she merely wanted to expedite the granting of a decree absolute in order to marry the monarch.

Motored to Nice.

Lord Brownlow, lord in waiting to King Edward and official spokesman for Mrs. Simpson, revealed, with a chuckle, Mrs. Simpson succeeded last night in evading the small army of journalists outside the Rogers' gates and motored to Nice where she strolled unnoticed along the Mediterranean shore.

The manner of her escape was not explained, but it was presumed to have been staged while Lord Brownlow talked with the assembled newspapermen.

The guard around the Villa Le Vieux was increased today to include three British detectives and four French police inspectors.

New Takoma Park Bus Line Foreseen

The public Utilities Commission is expected to order abandonment of street car tracks on Third and Kennedy streets and the substitution of a Takoma Park bus service before the end of the week as a result of a tour taken yesterday by the commissioners.

Only the selection of a bus route remains before the commission issues its order. Three proposals have been made, but members of the commission said they had not reached a conclusion following their trip.

The Capital Transit Co. specified one route in its petition; a citizens' mass transportation committee suggested that the route be split into two sections in the Takoma Park area, while Ninth street business men asked that the southern route be via of Ninth rather than Thirteenth street.

Besides Commissioners Riley E. Elgen and Richmond B. Keech, those who took the bus trip were James L. Martin, executive secretary of the commission, and Hinman D. Folsom, assistant corporation counsel.

The freshman student who has made the highest average in the college of agriculture will be awarded a medal by Alpha Zeta, honorary agricultural scholastic society.

Strikes Futile, Mrs. Roosevelt Tells Shoppers

Neither Side Gains, She Says, Urging Virtues of Negotiation.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 8.—From the same platform where appeared representatives of striking Pennsylvania hosiery workers, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt tonight told the League of Women Shoppers, Inc., "No strike really is good for either side."

"There is nothing really gained," she said, "by not being able to sit down and reason together, try to understand each other and come to a reasonable conclusion."

The league is supporting the strike of workers at the Reading, Pa., Berkshire Knitting Mill.

Speaking on the subject of the consumer's responsibility to labor, the President's wife went on:

"I have hope that through this organization and others we may be able to educate public opinion . . . so that anyone who is a consumer . . . will feel a responsibility—and that having that responsibility he should make his opinion count.

"The best way, perhaps (for women), is in the use of our shopping and spending power. I hope that is what we will do as individuals. This country does not wish to have any conditions that make life not worth living to any part of our country.

"When you start a crusade . . . you are going to be attacked," she said. "And unless you are careful to be fair and just, you run the risk of doing more harm than good."

Tokyo Cabinet Splits On German Agreement

Tokyo, Dec. 8 (A.P.).—A Japanese cabinet crisis, arising over the newly signed Japanese-German agreement, was reported today by the newspaper Miyako. Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita presented his resignation to Premier Koki Hirota, the newspaper said, with other members of the cabinet planning a mass resignation in the event Arita's resignation is accepted.

Arita's proposal to relinquish his post was reported by the paper to be the outcome of criticism resulting from the anti-communist alliance with Germany, which led Russia to refuse continuation of the Russo-Japan fishing agreement.

Los Angeles, Dec. 8 (A.P.).—Maria Wendt, pretty Eurasian girl, heard a Federal jury today pronounce her guilty of smuggling narcotics into the United States.

The jury convicted her on two charges, of smuggling and concealing $100,000 worth of narcotics.

She is subject to a possible maximum fine of $10,000 and prison sentence of 20 years. Judge Albert Lee Stephens will sentence her Friday.

A constant increase in the population at Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium, Glenn Dale, Md., is indicated by the monthly report of the superintendent, Dr. Daniel Leo Finucane, submitted yesterday to the Board of Public Welfare.

There were 181 patients in the institution at the end of November, as compared with 177 at the end of October and 106 on the last day of November, 1935.

Stamp Collectors Find Relaxation Pursuing Hobby

Cleveland, Dec. 8 (AP).—The quest for relaxation and lure of historical romance lead people to collect stamps and pursue the hobby with an unique ardor, Mrs. Catherine L. Manning, first woman philatelic curator of the Smithsonian Institution, said today.

Mrs. Manning, called Uncle Sam's own stamp collection expert, attended the second annual American Philatelic Congress, which terminated a two-day meeting.

"Persons who are tense for one reason or another find stamp collecting the perfect relaxation," Mrs. Manning said. "They bring out their stamps and their tenseness fades."

"Some people may collect stamps because they like the romance and history behind them," she contended. "Others may be interested in the development of printing as shown in the stamps; others in the progress of government."

Lady Heath Jailed For Disorderliness

London, Dec. 8 (AP).—Lady Mary Heath, 40, British pilot who was seriously injured at Cleveland in 1929, faced a sentence of 28 days in jail today after her conviction on charges of disorderly.

A magistrate in Bow Street Court offered to release her if she could raise £10 ($50) as a guarantee of good behavior for the six months.

Lady Heath attempted to obtain money but returned to court later informing the magistrate she had failed. The court then declared she must serve the term.

Lady Heath was charged with being intoxicated in the Piccadilly Subway Station last night. Testimony was offered at her hearing that she had been fined twice before for similar offenses.

Twenty separate discussion groups tomorrow afternoon and Friday will seek answers to such questions as:

What is the relative importance of music in broadcasting?

How should religious subjects be handled?

What is radio's force in American politics?

What are its implications as a social and educational phenomenon?

How may broadcasting be accomplished in the classroom?

What are its effects on rural life?

Sixty-eight national organizations are sponsoring or co-operating in the conference, all of whose sessions will be open to the public.

Pope Improved But Still Keeps Bed in Vatican

By the Associated Press.

Vatican City, Dec. 8.—Pope Pius continued to progress tonight in his fight to regain health and resume his duties as spiritual leader of millions of people, but he could not fulfill a wish to leave his bed.

Both the 79-year-old pontiff and his physician, Dr. Aminta Milani, had hoped he would be able to sit up in an armchair for a few hours today, after spending three days abed, suffering with partial paralysis of the legs and the infirmities of old age.

But chilly winds whistling around the 1,100 rooms of the Vatican Palace caused his doctor to decide against such a step.

His confinement caused particular disappointment to the holy father today because it was the feast of the immaculate conception, when Catholics in all ranks attend mass.

His holiness heard a private mass celebrated in his bedroom in the morning and received communion. Msgr. Gonfalonieri, his private secretary, conducted the service.

Dr. Milani declared the pope's progress was thoroughly satisfactory, and voiced hope he might be able to be about Thursday if his condition continues to improve at its present rate.

A dispatch from New York telling of public prayers being recited throughout the United States for the holy father's recovery, printed in Rome today, was shown to the pope.

U. S. Subpenas 2 Steel Groups In Labor Quiz

Unfair Practices Chaged to One, Interfering with Bargaining to Other.

By the Associated Press.

The second move within 24 hours by the Federal Government to bare the relations between the powerful United States Steel Corporation and thousands of its employes, was made here last night.

The National Labor Relations Board acted first when it ordered officials of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co., largest subsidiary of United States Steel, to appear here December 17 and answer charges of having condoned unfair labor practices.

Last night, the Senate Civil Liberties Investigating Committee disclosed that the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Co., another United States Steel subsidiary, had been subpenaed on complaints that it had interfered with the rights of workers to organize and bargain collectively.

The subpena, it was stated, was served on the company in Birmingham, Ala., December 1. Committee investiagtors said it had not yet been decided what officials of the company would be called for questioning.

One official of the committee said privately:

"We have something pretty hot."

The committeee, headed by Senator Robert J. Follette, is expected to resume public hearings next month. To date it has concentrated on the purchase of tear and sickening gas for use in combatting labor disputes and on the widespread operations of strickbreaking agencies.

Tampa Fight Reflected.

Lakeland, Fla., Dec. 8 (U.P.).—Labor representatives of the Northwest's great timber industry tonight threatened to merge with the insurgent C. I. O. as bitter internal warfare broke out in the convention of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners.

Spokesmen for the timber industry threatened to join John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization if they are not accorded full recognition at the convention of the Carpenters' Brotherhood—numerically the most powerful unit in the American Federation of Labor.

Inmates of the District Jail Donate Blood For 210 Transfusions Within Two Years

Downey One of Seven Aiding the Suffering Last Month.

The usefulness of District jail as a source of blood donors for charity patients in adjacent Gallinger Hospital was made conspicuously evident yesterday by figures revealed by Jail Superintendent Thomas Rives.

Since January 1, 1934, 210 transfusions have been performed in which the givers were jail inmates. That's an average of more than one a week. Last month, there were seven.

One of these seven was Bernard L. Downey, who has served four years in Atlanta Penitentiary and who is now locked up here pending an appeal against doing an additional eight years. It was the second time he had given blood to a Gallinger patient within four weeks.

Walked Out of Hospital.

In February, 1932, a hotel near Union Station and a laundy branch were held up in close succession. Shortly afterward Downey was arrested, indicted and convicted of robbery. Justice James M. Proctor, in District Supreme Court, sentenced him to four years on each of three counts.

Downey, then 26, with a father and sisters living here, was sent to Lorton. In the summer of 1934, he walked out of Gallinger Hospital, where he had been taken for medical treatment.

"Some friends had been in to see me and given me several drinks," he said yesterday. "I got drunk, walked out and took a taxicab."

He was caught a few hours later. That meant not only the cancellation of his "good time" but a transfer to Atlanta, where prisoners stay behind bars instead of in open dormitories as they do at Lorton.

Error in Records.

Last February his sentence expired—he thought. At least, his discharge was ordered, only to be held up when the Department of Justice said he had eight more years to go.

There was the rub.

Justice Proctor, in passing sentence, evidently had intended that the four-year terms run consecutively, making a total of 12 years. But the records, while stating that the terms were to be consecutive, specified that all should start from the same date.

"Now, is that reasonable?" Downey asks, his rosy complexion testifying to his suitability as a blood donor and showing no trace of a four-year prison pallor, as might be expected.

"If they're consecutive, one sentence has to start after the other, isn't that right? If all three start from the same date, that makes it concurrent and lets me out after four years."

Reports Hearing Soon.

Downey, a printer by trade, has read up on the law since 1932. Yesterday he produced a portfolio containing papers on his case—his brief, Government argument, transcripts of the statements by Federal Judge E. Marvin Underwood who granted him a habeas corpus writ in Atlanta, etc.

Last May, just a week after the Federal court decided he had expiated his crime, Downey was returned to Washington. He has been in District Jail ever since. Justice Proctor, early in September, resentenced him to two more four-year terms and had the original records corrected to conform.

Downey is carrying his fight to the Court of Appeals and expects to receive a hearing in a month or so.

He doesn't pretend that his availability as a blood donor has nothing to do with his campaign for freedom. But, as Superintendent Edgar A. Bocock, of Gallinger Hospital pointed out, practically all of the jail and reformatory inmates who volunteer for transfusions ask him for a letter of acknowledgment for possible use in clemency proceedings.

Burns Mistrial Declared; Jury Is Deadlocked

Grocer's Attorneys Seek Bond Pending Second Trial for Assault.

The case of John Henry Burns, 35-year-old District grocer, charged with criminal assault on a young Washington typist, was declared a mistrial in Montgomery County Court, in Rockville, yesterday.

After 17 hours of deliberation, the jury filed into the courtroom and told the court it still was deadlocked after its exhausting debate.

Seven of the venire stood for acquittal and five for conviction, it was learned, after presiding Judge Charles W. Woodward polled each of the 12 men.

Each juryman had voted at the beginning of deliberations as he had voted just before it was decided no verdict could be reached.

Burns was returned to Rockville County Jail, atop the new courthouse, without bond. His attorneys, it was learned late last night, are attempting to induce the judge to fix bond, so that their client may be free while his defense is planned again.

The estranged wife of the prisoner, who had sat tense and patient in the courtroom throughout the trial, refused to leave when the jury got the case.

She waited throughout the night, confident her husband would be acquitted. When the jury returned and announced it was deadlocked, she broke down and sobbed convulsively.

Denhardt Seeks Release.

New Castle, Ky., Dec. 8 (AP).—Circuit Judge Charles G. Marshall will hear arguments and testimony tomorrow in support of Brig. Gen. Henry H. Denhardt's plea that he be released on bond from jail at Louisville, where he has been held for the past 18 days awaiting action of the Henry County grand jury on a charge of murdering his fiancee, Verna Garr Taylor.

Van Sweringen Railroads Lost For Only $8,250

Brothers' Failure to Use Option Cost Them Vast Business Empire.

loan with a group of banks headed by J. P. Morgan & Co. its stock in the Alleghany Corporation, which in turn owned the stock of the railroads and other companies.

The banks, when the loan was not paid, offered the stock for sale at auction.

The Mid-America Corporation, controlled by George A. Ball, Muncie, Ind., glass jar manufacturer, was formed with 15,000 shares of common stock and proceeded to buy the Alleghany stock for $274,682.

Mid-America then gave the Van Sweringen brothers an option to buy within 10 years 8,250 shares of its own stock (a controlling interest) at $1 a share.

Meanwhile, the Van Sweringens were given by Mid-America a proxy to vote Mid-America stock as they saw fit, thus giving them back control for which they had not paid a cent.

Death of both brothers ended the agreement without the option having been exercised, gave unrestricted ownership to Ball, and made the 74-year-old Indiana manufacturer America's No. 1 railroad magnate.

There were the important facts which were brought out in the rail investigation yesterday which was enlivened by good-natured joshing and one clash between a witness and Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, committee chairman.

At one point during a lull in the hearing Wheeler and Senator White (Republican), Maine, were talking over the election results.

"We're going to buy Maine and turn it into an Indian reservation," said Wheeler.

"Can I get in on that?" quickly asked Ball, whose remarkable feat in "getting in on" the Van Sweringen interests was being probed.

Wheeler came out second best in another exchange with Ball. It was brought out that Ball is Republican national committeeman from Indiana. Herbert Fitzpatrick, who has just been elected to succeed the late O. P. Van Sweringen as president of Mid-America, is a former Democratic national chairman from West Virginia.

"You have a prominent Republican and a prominent Democrat in your organization," said Wheeler. "You ought to have a Socialist."

"I would be glad to talk to you about that," Ball instantly replied.

Besides Ball, the witnesses yesterday were George A. Tomlinson, Cleveland financier, who first interested the manufacturer in coming to the assistance of the Van Sweringens, and Harvey D. Gibson, president of the Manufacturers Trust Co., of New York, which loaned to Ball and Tomlinson a part of the money with which they formed Mid-America.

Wheeler asked Gibson if he expected the committee to believe that he knew nothing of the Van Sweringen option arrangement with Mid-America when he first discussed lending the company money. He had denied such knowledge.

"Most people believe what I say," snapped Gibson.

It was the only evidence of bitterness during the first two days of a remarkable hearing.

Wheeler opened the second day's hearing with an effort to show that there was an understanding between the Van Sweringen interests and the Morgan interests as to the amounts each would bid for the stock sold at auction.

The committee put in evidence a letter from J. P. Morgan & Co. to the Midland Bank, of Cleveland, of which Tomlinson is a director, indicating the amount it expected to bid for the Alleghany and other stock. It followed this with a copy of a memorandum written in the Morgan office indicating the amount of Mid-America's proposed bid.

The Mid-America bid was about $40,000 higher than that of the Morgan group. They were the only two bidders on most of the stocks and bonds.

Ball told the committee that when O. P. Van Sweringen first approached him with the proposal that he buy the securities he insisted that he would not consider the proposal unless Van Sweringen remained as the head of the business. He revealed that it was arranged that the Van Sweringen brothers should draw $100,000 a year as their salaries from Mid-America. Ball insisted that he had never had any idea how much the Morgan group intended to bid for the stocks.

Wheeler then put into the record the contract under which the Van Sweringens were given their option and proxy.

"I don't think Houdini could have done anything more pheomnal than the Van Sweringens did," he said. "They regained control of their vast empire without putting up a 5-cent piece."

Wheeler questioned the elderly manufacturer closely about a paragraph in the option that provided it could not be exercised until the Van Sweringens had "paid or adjusted any and all claims based upon now existing commitments or relationships that may now or hereafter become enforceable."

Tomlinson had previously been referred to by a committee member as a brother-in-law of Ball. He denied the allegation, but throughout testimony he referred to Ball as "my uncle," or "my cousin," or "my nephew." He seemed greatly amused by the error as to his relationship and continued the references until Wheeler asked him to cease.

Tomlinson explained that he had sold nearly all his stock in Mid-America to Ball and to the Midland Bank of Cleveland.

"My interest was largely sentimental," he said. "It would have meant a great deal to Cleveland if several thousand workers employed by the enterprises had been moved out of town by a new owner. I helped out because of my interest in the community and because of my friendship for the Van Sweringen brothers."

Wheeler insisted the properties had been included to prevent creditors seizing the option. Ball said it was intended to guard against the Van Sweringens having difficulty because of financial obligations in operating the properties should they regain ownership.

Type Exhibit Train Arrives in Capital

A four-car train gaily decorated with red, white and blue paint that would make the eyes of stoical John Gutenberg sparkle with delight steamed into Union Station yesterday loaded with the achievements of five centuries of printing progress.

Kelly presses that can turn out 42,000 pieces of printed paper in an hour, perforating machines that drill 3,333 holes a minute and automatic paper cutters and band saws make up the 36 tons of equipment carried in the Printers Progress Special sponsored by the American Type Founders.

The interior looks more like a drawing room that a printer's composing room. Small amphitheaters, similar to those in hospital operating rooms are provided for spectators.

The special has almost completed its 16,000-mile journey about the country visiting 72 cities. Only printers and those interested in the graphic arts have received invitations to view the latest in printing marvels.

Lloyds Abolish War Insurance Risk in Britain

European Situation Held Too Unstable for Coverage Now.

the tremendous damage wought by the civil war in Spain.

It was understood that losses of many millions of pounds sterling due to destruction of buildings in Spain has caused the underwriters to realize more than ever the increasing destructive power of modern war instruments, particularly bombers.

The bombing of Madrid has brought home to them in a dramatic way what might happen if a few well-placed bombs were dropped on the valuable financial section of London or other great European capitals. Destruction might result in overwhelming liability.

Monroe Doctrine Theory Discussed

By the United Press.

Buenos Aires, Dec. 8.—Co-operation with the League of Nations in peace efforts and a multilateral declaration of a "modernized" Monroe Doctrine by all New World republics were discussed today by the "big four" of the Inter-American Peace Conference.

Taking advantage of a recess because of the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, Secretary of State Cordell Hull, of the United States, and Foreign Ministers Carlos Saavedra Lamas, Jose Carlos de Macedo Soares and Miguel Cruchaga Todorual, of Argentina, Brazil and Chile, respectively, conferred throughout the day and exchanged views on the most important problems confronting the conference.

Those problems are:

1. To harmonize ideas regarding a peace plan and whether it should be restricted to the American Continent or linked with the League of Nations.

2. Co-operation with the Chaco peace conference, a separate group, in an effort to hasten a definite settlement of the dispute between Paraguay and Bolivia.

3. Extension of a "modernized" Monroe Doctrine to the entire American continent.

Isolation Opposed.

One group, headed by Argentina, is desirous of making the peace plan universal. Argentina, with its cultural ties with Europe, its large European populations and its best customer Great Britain, does not wish isolation from Europe. Saavedra Lamas, 1936 Nobel Peace Prize winner and world famed for his peace endeavors, recently told the conference: "In our work there is nothing regional or limited and our plans have not been continental only. We have aspired to be not exclusively Americans."

Brazil, acting as intermediary between Argentina and the United States, may be expected to play the important role of harmonizing those two countries' viewpoints. Brazil traditionally follows United States policy and also is developing the idea of "approximation of American States."

Macedo Soares soon will visit Chile at the express invitation of that government. He will be the first Brazilian statesmen in many years to cross the Andes to the South American west coast.

Chile, although a supporter of the League, recently advocated reform of the Geneva organization which worried League officials. Chile cannot be included definitely among the American nations desiring co-operation with Geneva in the League's present form. It also is expected that closer co-operation with Brazil will develop as result of Macedo Soares' projected visit.

The divergence of viewpoints regarding the scope of the peace plan, however, has not produced any rift in the conference nor are they expected to do so. The diplomats understood the situation clearly before the conference began and they are not expected to allow any possible conflict of views to interfere with success of the parley.

Just as the United States peace plan does not prohibit American neutrals from extending embargoes or restrictions to belligerents other than American States—as provided in article 10 of the draft project—so the final conference project is expected to satisfy the nations sympathetic to the League without binding the Old and New Worlds to joint action.

Co-ordination Proposed.

In co-operation with the Chaco peace conference, the inter-American parley has scheduled a resolution praising the work of the former and appealing to Paraguay and Bolivia to settle their differences.

Meanwhile, Peru proposed co-ordination of American antiwar pacts with the League covenant and the League Assembly's general act for pacific solution of September 28, 1928. The project was filed with the secretariat.

It provides for each of the American Republics which are members of the League to appoint an expert in international law to bring into line New World agreements to avert war with similar acts of the Geneva organization. The experts would meet in the capital of an American member of the League in 1937 to draft a definite plan for submission to the Pan American Conference to be held in Lima, Peru, in 1938.

Bell Laboratory Nets $2,112,000

By the Associated Press.

Resuming its investigation of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the Federal Communications Commission heard testimony yesterday that Western Electric Co. made a $2,112,000 profit out of the organization of Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc.

The testimony was given by Samuel Meisel, special FCC investigator who said he spent several months studying Bell laboratories records.

R. H. Gregory, Western Electric comptroller for the last 28 years, testified that prior to the organization of the laboratories unit in 1925 the work it does was carried on by Western Electric's engineering department.

Meisel said Western Electric made its profit in the organization of the laboratories by selling to the laboratories "for $4,852,000 properties carried on the books of the corporation (Western Electric) at $2,439,000."

U.S. to Drydock 150 Old Ships For Inspection

Vessels of World War Days Will Be Classified for Further Service.

Plans for drydocking more than 150 vessels of the Government's reserve merchant fleet, part of the great armada built by the United States to convoy its troops to France during the World War, were announced by the Maritime Commission yesterday.

Serviceability of these veterans of the seas for modern commercial purposes, or for use as naval auxiliaries will thus be determined.

As a consequence many of the craft which carried the 2,000,000 "doughboys" and officers to Europe when the Germans were thundering at the gates of Paris, will once more see service.

These boats are in little "Sargasso seas" at Staten Island, N. Y., Fort Eustis, Va., in the James River; New Orleans; Mobile, and Seattle.

They are divided into three classes. The first consists of 40 of the best ships, which are suitable for operation by the Government, charter or sale to American citizens or use as naval auxiliaries. The second is composed of 131 ships, of ngeligible commercial value, which would be used in case of national emergency and the last, numbering 26, have no value except as sale for scrap.

Policeman Breaks 2d Mark in Week

Private E. A. Horsley, policeman with a flair for the unusual, caused a second unbroken record to be smashed in Police Court yesterday when he arrested James S. Blackwell, blind pencil and shoelace peddler.

Horsley arrested the vendor, who is 42 and lives at 809 Ninth street northeast, at Seventh and D streets northwest. He charged the man with being an unlicensed vender.

In Police Court the policeman testified he had warned the man to move on before the arrest. Blackwell said he had been selling his merchandise on the corner for 18 years and had not been molested nor told he required a license.

Judge Edward M. Curran took the peddler's personal bond and warned him to get a permit for his own protection.

Horsley last week arrested a street car motorman for passing a red light after he had ridden several blocks on the car and had a long talk with the motorman.

Girl Confesses Killing Fiancee Of U. S. Officer

By the Associated Press.

East Lansing, Mich., Dec. 8.—Detective Lieut. Harold Mulbar, of the Michigan State police, said tonight that Miss Hope Morgan, 25, confessed that she fatally shot her friend, Miss Elizabeth Giltner, 25-year-old daughter of a college dean.

"I shot Elizabeth with my father's pistol," the officer quoted Miss Morgan as saying. "I did it on an impulse and don't know why."

Police began searching for Miss Morgan soon after the body of Miss Giltner, with four bullet wounds over the heart, was found on a rug in the dining room archway at the home of her parents, Prof. Ward S. Giltner, dean of the veterinary science department of Michigan's State College, and Mrs. Giltner.

Mrs. Giltner told the police that Miss Morgan was the last person seen with her daughter. The mother said she left the two in the Giltner home this afternoon when she went to a neighbor's house. Before the mother returned her son, David, 12, came home from school and found his sister's body.

Mrs. Giltner said the young women were addressing invitations to Miss Giltner's wedding, to have been next Saturday, when she left. She was engaged to Capt. D. S. Babcock, Field Artillery officer stationed at Michigan State College. Miss Giltner was to have been entertained at a shower tonight.

Dean Giltner said he knew of no ill feeling between his daughter and Miss Morgan. They had been close friends and classmates, he said, at East Lansing High School and Michigan State College, of which both were graduates.

Miss Morgan told Lieut. Mulbar, he said, that after shooting her friend she ran home, placed the weapon in her father's safe and went to the home of friends a few blocks away, where she was found just after a medical examiner reported that Miss Giltner had been shot to death.

Repair Toys and Dolls for Post's Christmas

Scene at the Christmas Workshop, 1524 L street northwest, where old toys and dolls, sent in to The Post Toy and Doll Fund, are repaired and repainted for distribution to Washington's under-privileged children. Left to right: Charles Bowers, Harry Devinney, Charles Donaldson and Robert Evans. This was the scene when, at 1:15 p. m. yesterday, station WJSV carried a broadcast from the workshop by Announcer Hugh Conover.

dnace, "The Dance of the Dying Swan," by either Arch McDonald or Arthur Godfrey. In their regular WJSV broadcasts both announcers have asked their audiences to send in toys, games, dolls and money to The Post Fund. And both have agreed that the one whose listeners send in fewer gifts will dance at the special Saturday morning matinee.

Meanwhile, workers at the Christmas Workshop and Santa Claus Center at 1524 L street northwest are busy repairing and reconditioning old toys and dolls kind-hearted readers sent in. Gifts do not have to be new or costly. The Council of Social Agencies and the playground department have organized special staffs to make use of every article turned in to the Post Toy and Doll fund.

But the organizations at 1524 L street are well equipped to take care of even more toys and dolls. Mrs. Virginia Nielson, in charge of the Santa Claus Center, is hoping Washingtonians will make this Christmas mean only happiness and joy to every youngster, and Mrs. Ernest F. Parkinson, directing volunteer workers, is waiting for an increased inflow of toys and dolls.

In the basement workshop a staff of four men, under James N. Caffrey, are repainting toys, repairing old chairs and scooters, fixing delapidated cars and wagons, and utilizing everything Post readers send in. Terminal taxicabs stop at the workshop throughout the day, delivering free of charge any gifts contributors can not bring in personally. By calling DEcatur 5130, you can arrange to have a taxicab call for your gifts.

Despite the co-operation of so many agencies, Christmas still held threats of being a joyless day for many of the 20,000 Washington children whom Santa Claus will have difficulty in visiting. Every penny sent in to the Toy and Doll Fund will help brighten the day for some youngster. And there is no limit to the number of toys and dolls, or to the actual money, that can be used in spreading the Christmas spirit. Won't you help Santa Claus reach a few more homes this year?

Cash contributions can be left at the counter on the first floor of The Post Building, 1337 E street northwest, or mailed to the fund in care of The Post. Toys and dolls can be left at room 101 at The Post, or in the special boxes in any People's Drug Store. Special baskets for the gifts are also located at Loew's Capitol, Columbia and Palace theaters.

Staunton Radio Station Hearing Meets Delay

The Communications Commission said yesterday a new date for a hearing on the application of the Staunton Broadcasting Co., for a new radio station at Staunton, Va., would be set in the near future, according to the Associated Press.

The hearing was scheduled for January 12, but was canceled after the company filed an amendment to its application, requesting daytime operation only, instead of unlimited time. The new date will be set after the commission's engineering staff reports on the amendment.

Bandit Suspect Wed in Hasty Ceremony Here

Alleged 'Boots and Spurs' Gangster and Bride Aided by Police.

With the aid of half a dozen detectives, romance "beat the rap" yesterday and Jack Joseph Kurz, 21-year-old robbery suspect of the "Boots and Spurs" gang, was married to Miss Hilda Crampton, 18, in St. Dominic's Catholic Church, Sixth and E streets southwest.

While newsmen and photographers waited outside the church, the young couple was spirited in a side door, joined in wedlock by the Rev. Joseph F. Beever, and spirited out again.

Young Kurz, one of three youths under indictment for a series of local robberies, was taken from his Sixth Precinct cell to District Court, where the marriage license was obtained. The bride met him at the church. All told, they had aproximately half an hour together before the bridegroom was returned to jail.

It had first been planned to have the marriage performed at the police station. A last minute change, however, took the couple to St. Dominic's. The ceremony had been postponed to await dispensation from Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore. Kurz is a Catholic and his bride a Protestant.

Kurz faces a long prison term if convicted on the robbery charges. He is being held with Paul Berger, 19, and William Beck, 21. Kurz and Berger were arrested last week in North Carolina and Beck was taken into custody here. All three have been identified as robbery suspects, police said.

Kurz, who lives at 716 Independence avenue southwest, celebrated his twenty-first birthday behind the bars last Thursday. His bride gave his home as her address, although she has been living with her mother, Mrs. Charles Crampton, in Edmonston, Md. She is employed in Cottage City, Md.

Federal Responsibilities.

Pressed for comment after a tour of the District Jail, Attorney General Cummings prefaced his remarks with the reminder that he had no authority over prisons. The statement recalls another made a few days earlier by Mr. Cummings before a Town Hall assembly. It had been suggested to him that the District of Columbia was more interested in the control of crime within the Capital's limits than in the pursuit of national "public enemies" throughout the country. To this, the Attorney General replied that the Federal Government, in its administrative duties, has no more to do with crime in Washington than with crime in Baltimore, for instance.

If Mr. Cummings had in mind only his own Department of Justice when he spoke of the "Federal Government," his statement was a fair one. The Federal Bureau of Investigation and other offices under his direction are dedicated to the promotion of justice throughout the Nation.

But the Federal Government, in its broader sense, has a very real obligation towards the Capital City. For Washington, created by and for the Federal Government, is entirely subservient to it. True, the city has its own jails and police force, but like all other branches of the District Government, they are under the supervision of commissioners who receive their authority from the President. More to the point, every department of the District administration depends upon Congress for its operating funds.

The Federal Government, then, has an interest in all Washington affairs. It cannot, for example, disclaim responsibility for the condition of the District Jail or the still more disgraceful rate of murder and robbery prevailing here. With proper cooperation from Capitol Hill, Washington could easily become a model of law and order and serve as a useful yardstick in police performance and prison management for the rest of the country.

That Congress is not unaware of its power to influence local affairs and particularly the Police Department was made abundantly clear last year with the uncovering of a "gentlemen's agreement" by which an important post in the local force was found to have been a bargaining object for at least one calculating Congressman.

Investigating Railway Finance.

In the opening sessions of its investigation into railroad financing the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee exposed in very dramatic fashion the fantastic nature of the Van Sweringen railroad empire.

Through their holding company, the Alleghany Corporation, the two brothers, investing relatively little money of their own, came into control of a transportation system valued at one time at $3,000,000,000. Yet, after a few years of depression, the corporation was sold on the auction block for $274,682. Through the expenditure of a very small sum—not much more, as Senator Wheeler pointed out, than the price of a couple of good locomotives—it was possible to take possession of the apex of the Van Sweringen pyramid and through it dominate a great multiplicity of operating railroads and other enterprises.

It is clear that the excesses of the holding company type of financial manipulation, of which the Van Sweringens were the outstanding practitioners in the railroad field, ought to be exposed. For this reason alone the Wheeler committee has an opportunity to perform a real service in bringing to light the unsavory practices which made it possible for a handful of men to play ducks and drakes with important sections of a great industry.

Yet it should be pointed out that no good end would be served and a real disservice would be done to the railroads if the committee's emphasis should be exclusively directed to the more sensational aspects of railroad financing. Certainly it would be absurd to assume that all railroad financing in the United States has been of the Van Sweringen type. The evidence is clearly to the contrary. The real need is for a thorough and scientific investigation of current railroad financing methods and the problems to which these methods have given rise.

The committee would be well advised, therefore, to act on the pledge given by its chairman, Senator Wheeler, to conduct its hearings "objectively," for "the welfare of the American transportation system." He is entirely right in stating: "The welfare of the country demands that the railroads be maintained as a solvent financial system. Otherwise the money necessary for refundings, or expansion, will not be forthcoming and the holder of railroad securities, the shipper and railroad labor will all be endangered."

Leaving One Door Open.

The decision of the Supreme Court upholding the Illinois and California "fair trade" laws may have an important bearing upon the evolution of industrial control in this country. In two unanimous opinions the Court refused to interfere with State legislation designed to prevent one type of unfair competition in the marketing of goods. Apparently the way is open for restoration within the States of at least some parts of the retail code set up by the NRA, if legislatures can be convinced that such action is desirable.

As to the wisdom of the particular acts sustained in these opinions there is widespread disagreement. Should manufacturers of trade-marked goods be permitted to control the retail price at which those goods shall be sold so long as they continue to bear the trade-mark? Some students of the subject who clearly recognize the evils of indiscriminate price-cutting nevertheless deplore the remedy employed in Illinois, California and some other States, which amounts to arbitrary price-fixing by manufacturers.

A distinction must be drawn between the practices permitted under these State laws and attempts to stop the sale of "loss leaders" as a means of attracting trade. In the code-making days retailers sought to prohibit the sale of goods at less than invoice prices plus a fair allowance for labor costs. Many of these same retailers are now distressed by the tendency to permit manufacturers to designate specific prices at which trade-marked goods must be sold, if they are sold at all.

However, this controversy involves legislative policy rather than legal rights. The Court found nothing in the State acts contrary to the Constitution, even though the vague "due process of law" clause was invoked by the interests challenging these measures. It called attention to the fact that abundant evidence may be found both supporting and undermining the theory that price-cutting by retail dealers is injurious. Conclusions on this point are properly left to the State legislatures. "Where the question of what the facts establish is a fairly debatable one," said Justice Sutherland's opinion, "we accept and carry into effect the opinion of the legislature."

The real significance of the decision, therefore, lies in the refusal of the Court to interfere with legislation that is not clearly in conflict with the Constitution. There is a widespread feeling that if the Court had considered the New York minimum-wage law for women and children with a similar attitude, it would not have been invalidated. The value and uncertain meaning of the "due process" clause gives the Court a wide latitude of discretion in cases of this kind. Its prestige was notably impaired by the prevalent belief that in the New York case the majority used that margin of discretion to set up prohibitions that are not inherent in the organic law.

Since the two cases are very different in detail it cannot be boldly asserted that the Court is now taking a more liberal view of the "due process" clause. But it is apparent that the States are free to permit the use of contractural devices to control merchandising practices. If the Court takes a similar attitude toward other State measures to regulate industrial and commercial competition, the current demands for amendment of the Constitution or curtailment of the judicial power will lose much of their strength.

For Propaganda's Sake.

Medieval aristocracy may not have known much about art, but its members knew what they liked. What is more, they directed popular taste so that court painters had no trouble in adapting their products to the market. Van Dyck and Velasquez could have given Carl Laemmle pointers about making successful pictures.

With the rise of that cruder sort of economic royalist who looks on paintings as slightly immoral gewgaws, artists became hard up for patrons. For a long time they depended on eccentric collectors and well-established clubs for patronage, consoling themselves when hungry with the slogan "art for art's sake."

Now, excepting those subsidized by the government, life among the artists tends to follow two diametrically opposite furrows. One group paints beautiful girls toying with something somebody wants to sell. The other is equally sure that "art is propaganda," but uses it to attack the capitalist system. Diego Rivera, the Mexican painter who three years ago put a portrait of Lenin into a Radio City fresco, is undoubtedly outstanding in the second group.

It would seem offhand that his school is still in search of the proper patrons. Mexican capitalists seem no more sympathetic than Mr. Rockefeller with Senor Rivera's attempt, in the best Communist tradition, to bore from within. A Rivera fresco depicting dictatorship, attributing to it the horrible combination of President Roosevelt's mouth, Mussolini's chin and Hitler's mustache, was recently removed from a Mexico City hotel by its owners.

But as long as every such incident brings Rivera added publicity and further orders, he will console himself that it is easier to wipe out a mural than a moral. The old political maxim was, "If you can't beat 'em, join 'em." As a proletarian painter, Rivera seems to work on the principle, "If you can't beat 'em, sell 'em."

The Centuries Looked Down.

When Stanley Baldwin arose in the House of Commons Monday to read his brief statement regarding the constitutional crisis, the centuries looked down upon him.

There is nothing very exciting about the present British prime minister. From his pipe to his boots he is the epitome of all that is plain spoken and matter of fact. And even by the watered-down standards of the present day he does not belong in the first flight as a statesman.

But on this occasion the mood was greater than the man. And the cheers that arose from every corner of the house constituted a tribute to the premier's predecessors as well as to him as their spokesman. For Baldwin spoke in the tradition of Britain's great days and his words, simple as they were, had overtones of the words spoken at Runnymede by the barons, in Westminster by Hampden and Pym, at Manchester by John Bright, and elsewhere by so many others in the long history of the evolution of Britain's democracy.

Though these words dealt only with the question of the King's right to marry the woman of his choice, yet they constituted a reassertion of Parliament's historic stand for supremacy as authorized spokesman of the people.

That is why, too, the far more glamorous Winston Churchill, scion of the Marlboroughs, soldier, parliamentarian, brilliant orator, stormy petrel, never got anywhere in his espousal of the King's cause. For the very term, "King's men," now again finding an echo in the highways and byways of England, arouses memories of remote, unhappy, far-off days and battles long ago. As between the King and the cabinet the members had no difficulty in making a choice. With few exceptions, Conservative, Liberal and Laborite showed an unmistakable determination to stand by the cabinet.

Liberties, if they are to have any meaning, must be revalued in each generation. However objectionable and unpleasant the present constitutional crisis may be for most Englishmen, it has one saving aspect. It has recalled to all thoughtful men that seven centuries of struggle were necessary to establish the rights which Parliament now asserts.

White Ties For The Reds.

Late dispatches from Moscow announce that within the shadow of the Kremlin, where sit the dictators of all the Russias in cotton tunics of studied simplicity, a shop window is displaying a morning coat, tail coat and dinner jacket. These represent the first ventures into sartorial elegance for the U. S. S. R.

Though of Soviet tailoring, the first two were modeled on British styles while the tuxedo pattern came from France. Perhaps there is no political import behind this choice of nations from which to borrow fashion plates. But certainly a bitter sociological commentary presents itself. Of all the devices of capitalism to be taken over by communism, the wing collar and boiled shirt had to be among the first.

The dispatch indicates that the men of Moscow are more closely in touch with foreign customs than the women. At least, several women in front of the arresting window were heard to ask what the display might represent; their male companions invariably supplied the correct information. This suggests that an urgent cable might well be sent to Moscow by a volunteer committee representing the thousands of unwilling wearers of the stud and link in these parts. If they have the slightest pity for their fellows, regardless of political persuasion, they will want to warn all Muscovite males never to let their womenfolk learn the true uses for dress clothes.

They should be advised to buy up the three models by popular subscription and burn them without delay. A hole, furthermore, should be chopped in the nearest river ice and the store manager responsible for the display quietly pushed through it. For, unless they work quickly, their growls will soon be added to the world's nightly chorus as they return home of an evening after a hard day's Stakhanovism only to be greeted with the information that "Sonya says we're to dress this evening, liubov."

Security And The Hired Man.

From The Portland Oregonian.

The Federal social security act makes no provision to aid that time-honored American institution, the "hired man down on the farm;" all persons engaged in agricultural labor are specifically denied the right to participate in the benefits of the retirement annuities, or 'old-age pensions," and the unemployment insurance provided for by law.

There has been an improvement in the financial situation of the hired man in recent years, whether he has noticed it or not, and it may be that has been counted on to enable him to provide for his own social security. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics reports that his average monthly pay has advanced from $14.77 early in 1933 to $22.51 on October 1, 1936.

The farm hand's social and economic similars, the hired girl and all other persons engaged in domestic household service, are likewise excluded from the benefits of the social security act. And it is probable their average earnings are as low as or lower than those of the farm hand.

Millions of Americans are engaged in the activities named; decent persons, usefully occupied and contributing materially to the national wealth and welfare, yet poorly paid. If government is to aid in the social securities of individuals, why not these?

The "6 Per Cent Plan."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Federal Trade Commission has cited the automobile manufacturers for unfair practices in that they advertise a credit charge of 6 per cent, whereas they are charging practically double that interest through a very old device for concealing cost of credit to buyer or borrower.

It is fine that Uncle Sam is setting out to remove this very ugly mote from the eye of American business. But he would be more effective as a crusader against raising, by concealing, credit charges if he would first remove the ugly beam from his own eye.

The Federal Housing Administration started out—and is still—putting the Government's stamp of approval upon home repair loans that were adveritsed as costing 5 per cent when the real cost is about 10 per cent even on a one-year basis because the home owner must reduce the loan each month, but he must pay 5 per cent on the whole loan as long as any part of it is unpaid. What is more, this charge is permitted when Uncle Sam, at the expense of the taxpayers, is insuring the lender practically against all loss and giving him the privilege of borrowing the full value of the repair loan from the Treasury at 3 per cent.

Following vigorous protests against the deception and against the high credit charges, FHA officials issued statements that the cost of repair loans was "only half as high as the usual personal loan costs." Just when did "personal loans" ever carry the guaranty of the United States Government? And just when before FHA's advent did the Government put the stamp of respectability on the usurer's trick of concealing interest? The explanations in later editions of FHA regulations that the 5 per cent really amounted to nearly 10 per cent do not condone or correct the original deception, for the real financing costs are not stated in terms of true interest in the loan contract. What is more, the belated explanations are made in publications designed for the lenders (who of course have always known what the real yield is when a monthly amortized loan is discounted at 5 per cent in advance); FHA information to home owners—when any is available—still runs: "Five dollars discount per $100 original face amount of a one-year note."

MARIE L. OBENAUER.
Joint Chairman, Home Owners' Protective Enterprise.
Washington, Dec. 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Federal Trade Commission has recently served notice on several automobile manufacturers and finance companies to show cause why an order to "cease and desist" should not be entered against them in connection with their advertisements of the so-called "6 per cent plan." In other words, the commission believes the public is being misled because in reality under this method of financing the buyer pays a charge of slightly more than 11 per cent on the deferred balance owing to the fact that it is repaid in monthly installments.

The point that the public has been misled seems to have been badly taken. Granting that many uneducated persons could be induced to make contracts for the purchase of automobiles, etc., in the belief that the advertising objected to meant 6 per cent per annum in the absence of words to indicate the contrary, anyone ought to know that if you want to find out how much it costs to buy a car on time, a little plain arithmetic will give the answer. Also, the writer knows from experience that any reputable dealer will gladly explain the procedure.

More Comment On The Royal Romance

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mrs. Simpson has been twice divorced. That in itself shows that she lacks the British stamina to carry on; that her character is selfish and narrow; that she is in no way fitted to stand the formalities, the long ordeals of duty which fall heritage to a Queen of England. If her love for the King is so great then why at any time, particularly so critical a period in history of the world, does she allow him to attempt to give up all that should be inherently a part of him? In this way could she ever hope for happiness for them? It is indeed a selfish love, if it is a love that she is giving in exchange for an all-sacrificing one.

E. T. E.
Washington, Dec. 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: King Edward has endeared himself in the heart of the American people. Through him we feel closer to the English throne. We admire him, respect him and love him as do his subjects. We respect his right to live his own life.

The whole thing should never have been brought to public attention. It was stupid of Mr. Baldwin to have nursed it to a crisis.

HERMAN WATERS.
Washington, Dec. 7.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A Canadian statesman said over the radio the romance is not a question of nationality, of royal or common blood, but a deeper question. They err who say it is aristocracy against democracy, or that it is the old against the new. It is a fundamental question of right.

From time immemorial kings have called upon their subjects to make personal sacrifice in defense of country. Now an empire calls upon its king to make personal sacrifice to maintain his country's standards.

AMERICAN WITH BRITISH FOREBEARS.
Washington, Dec. 6.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The whole world loves King Edward. He has made it love him. He should be true to this and not disappoint us. Think of having the world for a lover! Can he not comprehend it? A higher behest awaits him if he stands by his country instead of yielding to a spell which about everybody gets under more or less in this mortal dream and sees the folly of. Can he not remember how this was brought out in Anna Karenina? What did they get? Misery only. May he look down the path of reason longer than down that of dalliance.

We Americans have been too enthusiastic about the American side of the matter which is only one side. The press has carried the people away, so it seems, as it does too often in this land of the free and home of the brave. There are greater considerations than just what one wants to do. Mrs. Simpson, with her cool calculation, ought to help him to see the wiser course.

E. H.
Melrose Highlands, Mass, Dec. 5.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Let no one think from recent world events that the leaders of the English people have not sufficient spirit to act appropriately when a real national crisis arises. If we may trust accounts in the local press, the fear that their amiable monarch intends to marry an outlander has brought out their qualities of fearlessness and resolution in a way that would be impossible in an inferior race, even if due allowance be made for the amazing lack of finesse shown in the matter by the one time "Empire Salesman."

Weep for England. Once she dominated the world; now it seems that he will be complacent if she can dominate her King.

PAUL FITZPATRICK.
Washington, December 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a plain, ordinary American, the David-Wallis engagement didn't mean anything serious to me, but when church and political "dignitaries" began to unloosen venomous tongues—largely because it meant loss of prestige for the dignitaries—I began to hope and pray that those average Britishers, whose only chance for public expression is through the ballot, would get their opportunity. May the Baldwins get their just deserts. King Edward and Wallis Simpson were just too honest and above-board.

D. D.
Washington, December 7.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Edward's first thought should be his people. He was born to serve them. His personal inclinations, even in so important a matter as marriage, should be subordinated to that powerful hold he has been increasingly obtaining on the people of his empire. If he cannot find a suitable woman whom he can love enough to live with her in domestic peace, let him remain unmarried, as he has been content to live thus far. Let him live and die a "bachelor" king rather than jeopardize his influence with the leading men and women of intelligence in his domain, not to speak of intelligent people in other and sympathetic lands. As for the woman concerned, many of us would prefer not to speak, lest we express our near-scorn. If the English people will stand in this instance firm enough to show up the evils of easy divorce, they will do the world a service.

J. O. KNOTT.
Washington, Dec. 6.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am shocked and surprised by the letters and articles in The Post concerning "L'Affaire Simpson." Letters to the editor on December 7; Mr. Waltman's column; and the opinions expressed yesterday by Washington's Rhodes scholars, all favor the matrimonial designs of the English King and a lady who already has two living husbands, from one of whom she cannot be divorced if the English divorce law is honestly applied to her case.

Considering the age of the principals and their amorous experiences, can this be called "young love"? It would be absurd to do so. Anyway, why "American girl"? Does girlhood run to nearly half a century?

There appears to be a school of thought in the United States advocating the principle that sin is respectable if indulged in in public. I being a 24-carat sinner, disagree. Experience and observation have taught me that sin should be private; even secret, if that be possible. Shall we forget the meaning of such words as duty and sacrifice? Shall we forget good taste? I am generally accounted a bad actor, but I have not so forgotten. Finally, would Messrs. Waltman & Co. be so tolerant of John Doe and Mary Roe?

Conflict Of Forums.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The writer appreciated the letter by Mr. Louis Bessemer on the educational value of Washington's various open forums, and was glad to see other letters in The Post also approving the sentiment and sense conveyed therein. The chief accomplishment of the Caiptal City Forum and the Washington Open Forum is the fact that their policies are broad and comprehensive.

My only criticism is that quite frequently there is a conflict of meeting dates of these various forums, and I can be in only one place at one time. Of course I understand the difficulty of having a severely-arranged program previously, as some speakers become accessible only at short notice, but if their regular meetings could be arranged to meet on different nights, it would avoid the necessity of "tearing my hair" in doubt as to which to attend on a given evening, in case of different forums holding meetings the same date!

Today's Trees.

I don't know what can have come over the trees up around my place, but certainly they lack the rugged self-reliance of their ancestors who lived in the forests and fought it out. The tree doctor makes his final rounds about this time of the year, and he has been discovering alarming symptoms in some of them. He thinks the little maples should be wrapped in burlap spirals, something like a colic band or the French soldier's flannel sash, and he says they apparently haven't been getting the right kind of food. Too acid, and the result is indigestion, malnutrition and a rash on the bark. So he wants to change the formula to something milder and keep a sort of clinical chart on them next summer to see how they do.

The only tragedy on the place since the two black cherries were suddenly stricken, and died in spite of all that science could do, is the big swamp maple. This is a stout old tree which has been failing for two years, and the doctor, after poking around in the earth, decided that the man must have ripped off a couple of big roots when he was moving some boulders with the steam shovel.

However, there has been a little pile of sawdust, about a double handful, on the ground near the trunk, and this indicates the borers again. We suggested feeding it some strong, wholesome tree food and, though we dreaded the thought of an operation, we were willing to chance even that if it could do any good.

"No," the doctor said, "I am afraid it is hopeless. This is an old tree and its day is just about done. All you can do is make it comfortable these last few years of its life. We can trim it a little and give it some sedative, but that is about all."

* * * *

The agriculture trucks are up and down the roads all the time, and the tree nurses—half a dozen young men in high lace boots and corduroys—go through the groves taking temperatures, examining the bark for dead white leprous patches and condemning hopeless trees to death and total destruction for the sake of posterity. If they find a sick elm pretty far gone they write a little death warrant on a card and tack it to the tree. Later on the mercy killers will come through and not only cut them down, but destroy them.

They don't even want you to keep your own elms for firewood, because the germs can live in a woodpile and attack live elms in the spring.

Such eczemas and tumors, digestive troubles, respiratory troubles and infection as attack the trees these days turn joy to tragedy in the country. We sat up three months, so to speak, with the two black cherries, and they died in our arms, although in the days before the city people went up into the country nothing bothered them.

They were twins, apparently, and had roughed it successfully for 30 years in neighborly competition with the oaks and pines and beeches. Then suddenly they caught cold and were gone, for all that the specialists could do.

* * * *

Dogs seem effete, too. We had a pair when I was young that had, all told, about 25 pups in a rather full life, all of which lived without medical aid, steam heat, weaning formulas or inoculations. Nor did Peggy—that was the female—ever need the services of a veterinary.

When her hour arrived she just disappeared into the woodpile or under the barn and pupped and, in due course, brought them home herself. But now they have to go to a lying-in kennel and take their calcium tablets, and the pups get pneumonia, and they can't eat rabbit, because the fuzz gives them rabbit fever and there are distemper and rabies and all.

But those trees—they are a case. I never would have thought that trees would get so high-strung.

Missouri Navigation.

Although wheat was expected to be the chief downstream cargo, although drought cut the wheat crop to a shadow of its normal self and although the one rail-water elevator was destroyed by fire at the beginning of the shipping season, yet the Federal barge line on the lower Missouri will show a growth of business for the navigation season of 1936, which ended November 30. That is a promising outlook to those who have urged and supported for years the development of the Missouri River. But there is even more to it than that, as was explained by an official of the Inland Waterways Corporation in making the satisfactory report for this year's navigation. As far as the engineers have progressed—and that is to a moving point which is approaching Omaha—the loss from floods and from the erosion of rich bottom land has been minimized. Forty acres to the mile was the original estimate of the bottom land sacrificed annually to the rampages of the Missouri. That land now stays where it belongs. It neither washes away nor is subject to annual crop-destroying overflow. It remains to contribute to the wealth of the Missouri Valley. Missouri navigation has grown with the improvement of the stream and distinct savings have been made to shippers. It will increase with the extension channel control northward and with further recognition of the possibilities of water transport. The other benefits may be expected to grow likewise.

Napoleon Bonaparte

By Ross O'Donoghue

IN the months following his disastrous defeat at Leipzig, Napoleon could find no more faithful follower than Gen. de Caulaincourt nor more relentless enemy than Baron von Stein. Caulaincourt, Duke of Vicenza in Napoleon's new nobility, sought to make peace with the allies' representative Stein, Baron of the Roly Roman Empire, which Napoleon had abolished. Their meeting at Chatillon came to nothing for the allies' hatred of "The Scourge of God" which Stein never allowed to falter would allow no peace with Napoleon. This was the long feared catastrophe against which the other had warned his master. In the days after Jena, when "Napoleon had breathed on Prussia, and Prussia had ceased to exist" as Heine said, Stein put in his most effective work of organization for the ultimate day of triumph. Virtual dictator of the few square miles around Koenigsburg which was all that was left to the King of Prussia, he put through reforms that had more far-reaching effect than the more immediate object of freedom from the yoke of Napoleon. Serfdom and the rigid caste system were abolished and new national and municipal organizations were set up.

While the poets and reformers were crying for revenge and Fichte was delivering himself of his celebrated "Addresses to the German Nation," Stein was laying the groundwork to make success possible. It was he who conceived and put into effect for the first time the system of two years compulsory military service for every citizen. It was by this means that Napoleon's defeat was accomplished, not to mention that it was by the same method that the later Germany was able to organize its effective war machine. When Napoleon discovered that in addition to these more legitimate activities, Stein was also participating in a secret society to arouse Germany to war, he ordered that he be ousted and a price put on his head.

While Stein was governing 20 provinces of France during the invasion of the allied army, Napoleon sent his trusted Caulaincourt to the conquerors to attempt to gain some concessions, but the enmity of Frenchmen and the desire for revenge of the victors made anything short of unconditional abdication impossible to consider. His earnest pleadings, his ingenious reason and his relations with Napoleon, Caulaincourt carefully set out in the second volume of his memoirs, which did not come to light until a few years ago. The first part of these, published for the first time in an English translation as "With Napoleon in Russia," appeared last year. This second part deals with that single month between the ill-fated Congress of Chatillon and Napoleon's departure for Elba.

THE memoirs of Napoleon's greatest confidant during this short and tragic period are principally interesting in three important respects: They throw new light on the desertion of Marmont, Duke of Ragusa, with the Sixth Army Corps; they gave a clear and complete account of Napoleon's attempted suicide, and, most important of all, they reveal vividly the character of Napoleon in the time of despair.

There has always been some doubt about Marmont's intention to desert, which he himself stoutly denied. Caulaincourt makes it pretty clear that his dissembling was all a part of a well-arranged plan by which his troops should pass within the enemies' lines believing that they were on the way to attack, while their general was sailing away in Paris, apparently solely surrounded by Napoleon's adversaries. It was this treachery that made it absolutely impossible for the Emperor to fight and imperative that he submit to the most humiliating terms.

When Napoleon invaded Russia, it was Stein that Czar Alexander called on for guidance; and when Napoleon was forced to retreat, it was Stein that persuaded the Czar that now was the time to cross the Niemen to give Napoleon the coup de grace and incidentally free Germany from the oppressor.

Organizer of forces with which Bismarck and Hitler later worked, Stein failed by 40 years to live to see the accomplishment of his greatest ambition, the unification of Germany. Although he supplied the spadework by which this was later accomplished, his old age was embittered by his failure to personally bring it about. Not idle even in this later period, he instituted the most important of all German historical compilations, the Monumenta Germaniae which was not destined to be completed for more than a century.

Constantin de Grunwald's work offers a splendid picture of a great founder of modern Germany about whom nothing has appeared in English for a half century. It is a scholarly, well-written and well-translated work which is interesting not only as a little known aspect of Napoleon's fall, but also as an opportunity for English readers to gain an insight into the character of the man whom the Nazis hail as their precursor in his concept of the German state.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

The attempt of Napoleon to die by taking poison from the little bag which he had worn for years around his neck is told in a fascinating manner by the only eye-witness to the whole scene. According to him, Napoleon struggled to die, but his stout constitution would not let him. Although he writhed all night in agony, the great man recovered so rapidly that for many years the world knew nothing of the event, and until fairly lately it has been debated whether such a thing had ever actually occurred. This is the definitive account.

• • • •

THE impression of Napoleon's reactions to defeat and its effect upon his character, although set forth in the most favorable light, are yet sufficiently illuminating as to be well worth reading. Despair and false hopes possessed him alternately while he made one serious mistake after another. At one moment bitter, at the next resigned, through it all he seemed to be play-acting a great tragedy with himself as the hero. The flair for the dramatic was not lost even at the moment of attempted suicide, for he sought to enlist the aid of various of his followers in his plans for death, apparently sure that they would help him. One cannot but feel that his principal motives were those of self-pity and desire for sympathy rather than a serious purpose to do away with himself.

Much of the book that deals with the seemingly endless negotiations are rather tedious, but on the whole it is a very readable account by his most intimate follower of one of the least considered phases of Napoleon's life.

For Holiday Candy-Makers

"HOW TO MAKE CANDY," by Walter W. Chenoweth. (Macmillan, $1.75.)

Do you know the proper name for the inner white porous peel of the grapefruit? Do you realize the importance of dribbling, the proper use of a monoclinic, the need for a 'doctor'? Do you think that making candy is just a pleasant business of stirring up a mess of sweet stuff?

If you cannot give the correct answers to all of these questions (and you might as well know that the correct answer to No. 3 is "No") then you should never pull another yard of taffy until you have mastered Mr. Chenoweth's book. Ever since the New Deal gave professors a decent status in the world of affairs, a revolution has been freely predicted. Probably this is the beginning.

Mr. Chenoweth is the professor of horticultural manufactures and head of the Department of Horticultural Manufactures at the Massachusetts State College, and he speaks with the voice of authority. When he cracks down on popcorn poppers, they stay popped—even though his new 212-page book, tastefully bound in a soft caramel color, is probably the sweetest volume now on the shelves, sweeter than Lloyd C. Douglas, sweeter than Grace Livingstone Hill and Temple Bailly, almost as sweet as Mr. Chips.

The book includes discussions of materials, equipment, technique, classifications of confections, crystallization, fondants, etc., ect., etc. You can discover with a minimum effort "How a Stirred Candy Behaves," the way that candy should be seeded and the definitions for cerelose, albedo, etc., etc., etc. If you look far enough, you can even find some recipes!

The Education of Mrs. Henry Adams

Letters of 'Clover' Adams to Her Father Reveal Charm and Wit.

By Agnes E. Meyer.

MARRIAGE was not a part of Henry Adams' education, for he never so much as records in the famous autobiography the name of Clover Hooper, who became his wife. But education was the inevitable lot of any woman brave enough to marry Henry Adams. "We shall improve her," he wrote to a friend, while they were still engaged, and Mrs. Adams' letters to her father which have just been published are the unconscious record of what Adams achieved when his subtle concepts of the life-process were imposed upon the human being who was closest and dearest to him. That this man who always fled from reality should have risked marriage at all is indicative of the strong compulsion that he must have felt. "I am absurdly in love," he confessed; but the intensity of his devotion only accentuated in a man of his temperament the desire to perfect the sensibilities of his alter ego just as persistently as he strove to perfect his own.

The strain between those two personalities, high-strung, gifted and wilful as they both were, is a theme to which only the searching scalpel of a George Meredith could do justice. Mrs. Adams is known to have said to a friend that if ever she bored Henry she would commit suicide. That the end of it all was tragedy of the direst sort was inevitable. The quest for perfection is a heavy burden even when it finds its outlet in art or in religion, but when it lacks adequate expression and turns in upon itself, the result is frustration, as in the case of Adams himself, or destruction, as in the case of his wife.

THE marriage took place in 1872, and with the exception of one introductory letter written just at the close of the Civil War, the correspondence begins that year and continues with some interruptions until 1883, two years before Mrs. Adams' untimely death at the age of 40. Since all the letters were addressed to her father, Dr. Robert William Hooper, it is significant that during the first year of her marriage the signature remained "Always your, Clover," or "Lovingly, Clover," but after that, "Marian Adams" or the bald letters, "M. A.," take the place of the family name of affection. If we contrast the warmth and the youthful enthusiasm of the 20-year-old girl in her first letter from Washington, with the brilliant, humorous and worldly epistles which were later dispatched from the same city, it can be seen that the evolution which took place was the transformation of Clover, the well-beloved, into Mrs. Henry Adams, the distinguished and awe-inspiring social arbiter.

In the course of the two European trips which are recorded in the first half of the volume, the education had gone on apace. During the prolonged wedding journey to England, Germany, Italy, climaxed by four leisurely months on the Nile, Clover's eager receptivity which she describes in that first letter—"I have had my eyes wide open and my ears and my mouth, and my pulse and heart going like race horses"—was exposed to the influence of the many distinguished personages and the few real friends that Adams had made when he served in London as secretary to his father. How sharply this distinction of the world and one's friends was made by Adams, Clover was to learn when she met Sir Robert Cunliffe of whom Adams said: "R. C. is one of my swans; I am very fond of him and have always found him a gentleman to the core . . . We or our friends have canvassed creation, and there are but a dozen or two companions in it—men and women. I mean, whom you like to have about you and whose society is an active pleasure." There was the inexorable standard to which Henry Adams' wife had to mold herself.

NOT that these letters are interesting merely because of the light they shed upon one of the most elusive figures in our recent literary annals. Far from it. Her husband once said of her: "My young female has a very active and quick mind and has run over many things, but she really knows nothing well, and laughs at the idea of being thought a blue." Nevertheless these letters, often written hastily, between journeys and visitors, so to speak, have a vivid quality, and particularly in the personal comment, a terse, witty style that makes them excellent reading and causes them to sound very modern, though the whole tone is more dignified—even haughty—and the vocabulary less strained than our contemporary efforts of a similar nature.

• • • •

IT is said frequently of Mrs. Adams that she became snobbish under her husband's influence, but to call her that is, I think, to miss the point of her evolution completely. It is nearer to the truth to say that in yielding more and more to the Adams point of view she became exacting and even severe. But the excuse for the demands which she and her husband made upon the world, is that they made even greater demands upon themselves.

Moreover, such individual criticism as Mrs. Adams metes out right and left with a rapid and inclusive glance of the eye, are most frequently aimed at moral or intellectual limitations. She was not a person to be impressed by wealth or position or fame of any sort. Of Oscar Wilde, then all the rage, she says firmly: "'Hosscar' Wilde, as they call him, has been and gone. I escaped his acquaintance, but only by a tour de force which nearly frightened my hostess, Mrs. Pendleton, out of the very few senses nature gave her. I'll tell you hereafter; it is a viva-voca tale. Last week on Pennsylvania I met a tall, slender man, cafe au lait in the face, long hair, dressed in stockings and tights, a brown plush tunic, a big yellow sunflower pinned above his heart, a queer cap on his head; turning to look after him, as you taught me was very vulgar, I saw a large blue card on his back, 'Oscar on a wild toot.' When Henry James told him he was very homesick for London, he said 'Really? You care for places? The world is my home." And again: "I have asked Henry James not to bring his friend Oscar Wilde when he comes; I must keep out thieves and noodles or else take down my sign and go West."

• • • •

IN the field of politics her judgment was no less forthright. In 1882 the attacks on James G. Blaine, then Secretary of State, were at their height. Adams and his wife belonged to the liberal wing of the Republican Party which was violently opposed to Blaine but, as Adams put it, they also "refused him even social recognition on account of his previous scandals." To do this in the small city which Washington then was, required "not only some courage but some skill," especially as Adams was connected with the State Department and Blaine was for a time his chief. Mrs. Adams' disapproval is more violently expressed, as is but natural, for she was altogether more forceful than her husband. She may have taken her direction from Henry, but she supplied her own steam.

"We are deeply interested here in politics and hope that the rat Blaine is in a corner at last. He is of course lying and squirming and bullying, but there is worse to come, and all the press is against him but the Tribune, whose editor, Whitelaw Reid, is a scheming tramp from Ohio, sold to Blaine, body and soul. • • • I am glad indeed that we never broke the man's bread nor so much as pulled his door bell. Mr. Lowndes and we alone in this society took that stand and for eight prospective years to cut the Secretary of State was a measure which brought on us much criticism and some ridicule, I fancy, but let me say that we are not now the only three who cry 'Stop, thief'—not by a long sight. He's down now and so they can safely jump on him."

The desire for safety certainly never inhibited Mrs. Adams. In fact, there are sure to be several minor tempests in Washington when some of her strictures and wickedly amusing characterizations are perused by indignant descendants. Her independence is indeed breath-taking. Of one old friend who had, in her opinion, made a mesalliance, she reports: "He has taken a pretty new house a few hundred yards from us! Every time I see him he asks me if I've been to see his wife and I'm afraid I must tell him that I cannot and that he must not ask any lady to visit her! To steer one's small cockboat in these rapids is as difficult in the season as shooting 'El Bab' at the first cataract of the Nile, and there we had a 'praying sheik' with a pea-green flag."

Even her good friend Henry James does not escape her critical insight. What better summary of the great novelist's style could there be than her remark: "It's not that he 'bites off more than he can chaw,' but he chaws more than he bites off."

• • • •

BUT the proof is also contained in these frank outpourings that Mrs. Adams found many things and many people to like and to love whom it took feeling and depth to appreciate. On the whole she rather scorned what passes for aristocracy. "Henry and I found that the very pleasantest Englishmen are those in the 'upper middle class,' as they call it, whose brains and opinions are not entailed."

She preferred a "dinner of yarbs 'where love and wit are' to stalled filet and terrapin."

Among her most devoted admirers were the greatest men of the period, John Hay, Clarence King, Carl Shurz, Henry Cabot Lodge and a host of others who came and went constantly in that social household. But she is most lovable for the queer people she collected, like "one Dr. E. Bessels of Heidelberg, did I tell you?—has been on four North Pole Voyages; was accused of murdering Hall, floated 196 days on pack ice; is having my two portraits cleaned; is stuffing me an owl; is mending the amber cross of Adie's wedding present to me; brings me Strassburg pate de fois gras and is full of all human knowledge; is very Hebrew in appearance, with long hair and unkempt garb."

Those who were close to her were entranced by her witty turn of phrase and there is evidence enough in her letters that her conversation must have been of a flashing spontaneity. How else could she so often have invited five or six brilliant men to dine with her alone and had them accept with avidity? There are indications that Henry was extremely possessive and resented a little this excessive popularity. When on one occasion she fled for a short visit to friends in New York, Henry met her at the station upon her return and announced that he was glad she had enjoyed her week but that "it's his last alone."

Having produced this one human masterpiece—for how could Adams tell then that his own education was to be considered another?—the artist was loathe to share it with anyone. And when suddenly she was so cruelly snatched from him, he paid her the greatest tribute that a literary man could bestow—the tribute of silence.

A First Novel

"SO FREE WE SEEM," by Helen Todd. (Reynal & Hitchcock, $2.50.)

This is a first, but not "just another first," novel. It might be a second or third by an author with much more experience than 24-year-old Helen Todd can possibly boast. It contains none of the lumbering phrases and awkwardly conceived and executed passages that characterize most first novels. In short, there is nothing amateurish about it.

The story is a finished, moving one of what might have happened to any man and woman who cast their lot on the trail of the Westward-moving frontier. High lights in the narrative are woven around an emotional conflict so skillfully portrayed that almost any reader will follow with avid interest the turns it takes through the book.

The story is not a new one, but this book has much more to recommend it than the slender plot on which it is based. Readers who follow the account of Blaize Ormandy and Ann Wingate may soon forget the events of their lives, but they will not forget the characters themselves, and they will long remember that the career of one was motivated by an enduring love.

"So Free We Seem" is worth three hours of anyone's time. It is not a perfect novel, nor by any means a second "Gone With the Wind." But its characters are indelibly impressive, and their lives, as related by Miss Todd, will make many readers look forward to her next novel.

HOPE RIDINGS MILLER.

A Brutal Book

"PERSONAL COMBAT," by Elliot Arnold. (Greystone Press, $2.50.)

Terence Donahue fought a personal combat within himself all his life. If you are squeamish reading what happens when inner cowardice drives a man to a display of physical bravery, when the pitiful shams of self-deceit fall away and leave a man naked to face himself, don't read "Personal Combat." It hurts. It hurts because it is genuine. It is brutal because Terry drove himself to brutality with the scorn of his own weakness.

The story is that of a young boy of middle-class parentage living in a normal average neighborhood, and yet throwing himself into abnormalities, small at first, and then mounting with incredible momentum to climax and ruin. Taking lumber from a construction job was just "gypping." Cheating a fellow schoolmate on a punchboard raffle was a lark, until he got caught. Then it was personal tragedy. It set forever the warped mold of Terrence Donahue. He had to outlive it. He had to "show 'em."

Arnold has done a good portrayal of this smashing of a man's character through his own weakness pitted against his own strength and cunning. The minor characters are real, even when viewed through the hazy, twisted perceptions of Terence Donahue. Arnold has sketched each deftly and surely, and placed his emphasis carefully.

"Personal Combat" is a brutal book, but it is well conceived and well executed.

DOUGLAS STAPLETON.

Victorian Charmer

By Rosamond Cole

CLEOPATRA, Aspasia, Pompadour, Nell Gwynne, Annie Oakley and P. T. Barnum all seem to have been rolled into one in the person of Lola Montez, international charmer who flourished on three continents and died in the United States after a career which included the stage, being a king's mistress, a political power, a mining camp queen, an author, and a lecturer.

Horace Wyndham in "The Magnificent Montez" chronicles the travels, affairs and business ventures of one of the most picturesque characters in history. Despite limited sources, because according to him facts on La Montez were sadly garbled, both by contemporary writers and by herself, Wyndham undertakes to give an accurate account of this remarkable woman, although he occasionally does break down and complain. The predecessor of a long line of "glamor girls," Lola was copy in the press of many nations for many years.

• • • •

ALTHOUGH she claimed to have been born in Seville, Wyndham establishes her birthplace as Limerick; the date, three years after Waterloo, and her parents, Ensign and Mrs. Edward Gilbert.

Lola's adventures began at a tender age, with an early childhood, spent in India. That being considered an ill place to rear a little girl, she was shipped off to a gloomy spot in Scotland, to relatives of her step-father. This proved agreeable neither to Lola nor the Calvinistic relatives, and she was sent to Bath as companion to Sir Jasper Nicolls' daughter, Fanny.

LOLA MONTEZ.

This environment was a gentle one, and the romantic young girl might have settled down to a conventionally British domesticity if it had not been for her mother.

Lola's mother was responsible for her first exploit. She came to Bath, all set to carry Lola back to India and an elderly husband. On the voyage she told her plans to young Lieut. James, going home on leave. James stopped in Bath long enough to woo and wed Lola, after an exciting elopement. James was the first of four husbands and many lovers, the most illustrious of whom were Ludwig I, of Bavaria, and Franz Liszt.

A beauty, and blessed with a charm and grace which set the masculine population on its ear in those early Victorian days, Lola took to the stage after her first marriage proved a failure. Booed off the stage in London by a boxfull of young bloods, she went to Paris. There she became a leading light in the cafe coterie, composed of authors, musicians, actors, journalists, and assorted ladies of pleasure. Alexander Dumas was one of the circle, and Flaubert was not above a how-do-you-do.

As the author points out, Lola was more than a courtesan, or her story would not have been written. Completely unscrupulous, she was a genius in a way, and she was a master showman.

• • • •

FINALLY convinced that she was not cut out for the ballet, and bored with Europe, she set out for the United States where she earned moderate success in the theater and reams of newspaper space. From the East she went to California, where her activities included roughing it in a mining camp and another marriage, which lasted no longer than the others.

Lola may have been many things—most of which she later greatly repented with the fervor of a modern revivalist—but above all she was valiant. One of her last ideas, put to use as a bread winner, was an autobiography (ghost written by a clergyman) and lectures on charm and beauty. Some of them are included in Wyndham's book and they lend an air of authenticity to what at times seems fiction rather than biography.

Successful for a time, these, too, began to fail her and she cast about for new schemes. But the sands were pretty well run out; she realized it, and with the sense of the theatric which characterized her actions from childhood on, she dabbled in spiritualism, "got religion," and died from tuberculosis almost without friends in New York City in 1861.

Lola's story is a readable one, and Wyndham tells it well, if a bit sloppily in spots.

for it and struck him over the head.

"He stopped beating her then. Edith's mother, who had been looking on, asked Trigg if he were hurt. He said he wasn't, and went on to bed.

Heard Him Get Up.

"The others heard him get up about 40 minutes later. They heard him say he was going to spit. Then they heard him crash to the floor. Edith ran for the doctor, but it was too late. He was dying.

"The two doctors who performed the autopsy here said they believed the slipper blow was the cause of Trigg Maxwell's death. And yet they admitted in their report that they found no fracture of the skull—only a shallow cut about 3 inches long. They said that blood clots found in the vertex of the brain, together with minute hemorrhages found in the posterior portion of the brain, was the cause of death."

"We admit Edith Maxwell struck her father with the slipper, but we deny that there was ever murder in her heart. If there had been a slipper was a poor and fragil weapon to use."

In Edith Maxwell's first trial, no question was raised about the manner of Trigg Maxwell's death. The defense lawyers' sole contention was that Edith struck her father in self-defense.

This plea did not appeal to the jury.

The death of Trigg Maxwell occurred July 21, 1935, at The Pound, a crossroads hamlet 13 miles from here.

Sentence Aroused Public.

Edith, who had been teaching in a one-room school for $60 a month, went on trial in the following November. The harshness of her sentence aroused lovers of justice all over the world.

The Washington Post sent a reporter, Daniel B. Maher, to this mountain town to investigate.

Earl Maxwell, Edith's brother, and Maher got a copy of the autopsy report. They showed it to a number of medical experts in the metropolitan area. In every case, the expert told them there was nothing to show the slipper blow had been the cause of death. On the contrary, the experts said, the report indicated that it was not the cause of death.

Meantime, readers of The Post were contributing to an Edith Maxwell defense fund. It had been decided to fight for a new trial and Smith had been engaged to lead it.

Last September the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, the highest tribunal in the Old Dominion, ruled that the verdict in Edith's first trial was not justified by the evidence, and ordered the trial that is to start tomorrow.

Edith, who has been living on a farm near Richmond since she was released on bond, arrived here tonight, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Anne Dotson Maxwell, and her 13-year-old sister, Mary Catherine.

The prosecution has summoned 38.

A venire of 78 men is available from among which to select a jury. If among these there are not 12 who are acceptable, Judge Ezra Carter will ask the sheriff and his deputies to go out on the mountain trails and round up another venire. If he sheriff and his deputies do have to resort to a round-up, they will find the mountaineers hereabouts mighty busy. It is hog-killing time in the Lonesome Pine country.

Inclosed find.....as a contribution to the Edith Maxwell Defense Fund to be used by The Washington Post in her retrial.

Chimes Are 'Spiritual Benefit,' Cleric Says in Answer to Suit

Father Smyth Presents Statements From Neighbors, Who Says Angelus Bells at Chevy Chase Circle Are 'Uplifting' Influence.

The "Angelus chimes" of the Church of the Most Blessed Secrament, near Chevy Chase Circle, were pictured as a quiet, early morning religious ceremony in a reply filed yesterday by the Rev. Thomas G. Smyth, pastor, who is seeking to prevent a court order declaring the chimes a disturbing factor in the neighborhood.

The answer was filed in competition with a plea filed by 22 persons who filed suit asking that the chimes be "muzzled" for various reasons. One among them was that the chimes disturbed their early morning rest.

In his answer, the Rev. Father Smyth explained a number of non-Catholics had offered to submit affidavits certifying to the fact that the chimes, which are rung at 6 o'clock and 7 o'clock, are not disturbing. In fact, the answer said, the affiants claimed they were uplifted and enthused by the chimes, which were of a "great spiritual help and benefit." In many instances, it was shown, those preferring the chimes lived nearer to the church then those opposing them.

In his answer, the Rev. Father Smyth said the church has an investment of some $700,000 in property, that the chimes cost $11,000 and that they were used to play numerous patriotic airs. The pastor said that for the court to stop the chimes at the hours complained of would be to alter the "freedom of religious worship" and would be an infringement of the constitutional rights of the church. The answer was filed by the law firm of Doyle, Thuee and Malloy.

Seeking the injunction against the ringing of the chimes, persons living near the church said it disturbed their slumber and caused them no end of anguish. They said they were often found anxiously awaiting the ringing of the chimes when they knew they were about to be rung. A hearing on the merits of the case will be heard after the Christmas holidays.

$5,000 Is Left Hospital in Will Of Mrs. Randall

Describing Mrs. Charlotte Bryson Randall as a reticent person who had asked that all unavoidable publicity be omitted, the American Security & Trust Co. petitioned for probate of her will, disposing of an estate of approximately $136,000, in District Court yesterday.

Mrs. Randall was found dead in the garage of her home, 3707 Ingomar street northwest, last March. She was said to have suffered accidental death from the fumes of her automobile.

Emergency Hospital was given $5,000 for a "cubicle" for policemen and firemen needing medical attention. The automobile in which she was wont to attend fires near her home was left to John S. Imirie, of the Bethesda, Md., Volunteer Fire Department.

Bernard John Cassell, now living in the Ingomar street residence, was given the contents of the home and was named chief beneficiary of the will. Matthew Cassell, of New Jersey, was given $1,000 for the education of his children and Mae Cassell Smith, of Long Island, N. Y., was given $500 and a clock.

Royal Hawaiian Group Leader Real Musician

Orchestra Is Entertaining at Hi-Hat; Good Shows at City's Clubs.

By Chanticleer.

Not that we're trying to encourage more adults in taking up the bull fiddle, but it has just come to light that David Naeole, who presides over the Royal Hawaiian entertainers at the Ambassador Hi-Hat, never played a note until he was full-grown. Now he plays the big fiddle regularly with the band, and can take his turn with the best of them at the uke, straight guitar, tenor guitar and the hard-to-play electric guitar.

Modesto Reyes, the group's pianist, contributes chiefly to the swing tunes offered with some hot breaks that would do an American's heart good. Then there's Helen Malcolm, now in her sixth week at the Hi-Hat. Helen is the singing cigarette gal who fills in between orchestral groups all by herself. She has a collection of those intimate little ditties the customers enjoy so well.

The cocktail lounge at the Carlton is overflowing these evenings into the dining room, where Sande Williams and his orchestra entertain. And maybe you haven't found out for yourselves as yet—but a Washington trio plays at luncheon and dinner at the Carlton, featuring Victor Herbert type music.

A review of the local talent situation is the bill at La Paree this week, with a show completely composed of localights. You'll find Toma Genaro, Lucille and Linda, Gene Carmine and Vera Miller topping the list. Production by Charlie Demma. And with a chorus of 12 of Washington's own maidens.

Eddie Peabody is back in town, at the Shoreham. After his last stop here in May he went to Dallas, where he was guest of President and Mrs. Roosevelt and the Texas Exposition. Then to California, where he played before half a million at the State Democratic Convention. (Thereby showing he was with the popular majority.) And he's been to Radio City since, too. Incidentally, you may not know he's a good violinist as well as "king of the banjo."

Despite a rumor—Griffith Farms is not closed for the winter months. Not by the proverbial jugful. Louis announces the Farms dining rooms are open daily for dinner with an orchestra for dancing Saturday nights.

Matt Windsor's new dollar dinner at the Club Volga Boatman was declared a wow by the customers. And then Matt and his accordion and much of his revue entertained at the Bar Association dinner the other night—and that was declared a wow, too. Matt argues there ought to be a place where a boy and his best girl could go for dinner, a floor show and dancing until late enough—and for the cost of a dinner alone elsewhere. So he's providing it.

Another new show at the Lotus this week. The chorus is known as the Abdullah Girls and have been a smash hit before at this spot. Bongard and Dooley are being held over for their last week; Barrie and King are introducing a tango and fast whirlwind; Frida Sisters, in their first appearance at the Lotus, in a novelty number, and Mavis Abdullah in a fast tap—that's the roster of specialty stars.

Milt Barrett said "strike up the band"—and boy, they struck it up. Meaning that Agnes Harris is at the Dude Ranch directing Berk Motley's orchestra, from down Florida way. June Daley is on hand this week with some really original toe and tap specialists. Just finished a ten-week stand at Baltimore's Wonder Bar.

"Holiday Frolics" is the new show introduced this week at Cocoanut Grove. And it includes everything: tap dancing, ballroom dancing, rolls, shakes and roars—the latter of laughter. Paul Tremaine and his orchestra for your dancing. Don't overlook the Grove's new policy: a dollar dinner from 5:30 to 8:30 p. m.

Drop in and have a look at the 1,000 and 1 screwy signs on the walls of the Barbary Coast. And you'll be invited to make all the noise you wish and you'll have to pay a dime to dance. Dorothy Tovar, the singing hostess, guarantees "never a dull moment."

The Varnons—Evelyne and James—are dancing this week at the Raleigh's Pall Mall Room. They're brother and sister. Big attraction at this grand new spot is a Christmas party tonight with Henry Nestor and his quartet from Commissioner Hazen's office; the Rays, violin and accordion; Betty Hartz, deb, who made her singing debut a few weeks ago; Sara Bella and Jacqueline McGraw, sister tap team, and other acts by civic groups.

Jimmy Pusd, big boss at the Mayfair, says: For that tired feeling you get while Christmas shopping, take one large dose of things good to eat and drink at the Mayfair late in the afternoon.

Capt. Hick Hope, the wandering accordionist, has become a regular member of the Russian Troika family of entertainers. They've been saying for a long time that one of the Troika's waiters is a dead ringer for Mussolini. Now it seems that one of the team of Orlik and Lolik has a profile exactly like King Edward.

It seems that some of yous guys took that reference last week to the Brinkley Nightcap lightly. As a result, several found shutters over their eyes at a ridiculously early hour. If you still want to be shown—the address is Eighth street in Southeast Washington. Brinkley's is the name.

Johnny Shaw has a word to say about his Versatile Sextet pianist, at the Madrillon. Carr van Sickler, according to Maestro Shaw, is not only a fine pianist, but has gone Gershwin, producing two new dance tunes. One is "I've Only Got Time for Love," belonging to the swing school, and the other, "Stellita," a rhumba. The sextet also is featuring a new rhumba called "Piruli," brought up from South America by one of Johnny's friends.

New Air Giants For Transport Use Predicted

Million Passengers Carried by U. S. Lines in Year, Bureau Reports.

By the Associated Press.

The Bureau of Air Commerce, estimating that 1,000,000 passengers have traveled America's air lanes this year, said yesterday planes twice as large as any now in use may be flying commercial routes in two years.

A bureau official said one manufacturing company is constructing a 40-passenger, 20-ton ship. The largest planes now flying scheduled routes carry a maximum of 21 passengers.

The bureau also reported yesterday that American manufacturers produced 2,197 airplanes in the first nine months of this year, an increase of 68 per cent over the same period a year ago.

Of shipments abroad, Commerce Department export statistics showed China was the largest buyer, taking 112 planes.

Argentina, with 41, was the next largest buyer, and Mexico, with 33, was third.

Department records did not show whether the planes were for civil or military use.

Flying as a commercial enterprise over established routes is only about 10 years old. In 1926, regular transport planes carried 5,000 passengers. In 1935, the number was 800,000.

Judge in Racine Asks Soldiers For Strike Area

Tells Governor Anarchy Exists in City; Sea Strike Curbs Yule Trade.

By the Associated Press.

A judge demanded troops yesterday to enforce order in one of the Nation's strike centers.

Declaring anarchy existed at Racine, Circuit Judge C. M. Davison asked Gov. Philip La Follette of Wisconsin for the aid of the militia.

The jurist said his injunction restricting picketing at the strike-closed J. I. Case plants had been violated and accused the mayor and sheriff of withholding co-operation. The Governor held soldiers should not be used "except in dire necessity."

Approximately 180 motorbus drivers of the Eastern Michigan System, and Flint Trolley Coach, Inc., walked out, demanding higher pay. No buses operated over the eastern Michigan lines connecting Detroit, Pontiac, and Flint. Detroit and Mt. Clemens and Detroit, Wyandotte and Trenton. Flint residents were forced to use taxicabs and private cars.

America's Christmas trade with the Orient came to a virtual standstill in the prolonged West Coast maritime strike. Spokesmen for the offshore ship operators and unions carried the issues into a debate at the Civic Auditorium in San Francisco.

Twenty reports of minor violence came from the seamen's strike front in New York. Striking members of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association there and in 13 other ports voted to oust anti-strike officials of their organization.

Reduction in WPA employment caused fresh demonstrations in New York. Some 175 employes who participated in protest strikes involving theater and city planning projects were ordered dismissed. Forty-four of them hurried to see Mayor LaGuardia. He announced he would go to Washington to complain. Some 50 pickets appeared at WPA headquarters and 75 others took stations in front of the theater project director's office.

Federal Conciliator H. T. Colvin expressed hope a conference between union leaders and Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. spokesmen would end the six-week strike of the firm's 6,000 workers. The "sit-down" marathon of 1,300 glass workers at Ottawa, Ill., rounded out a full week.

At Toledo, President G. W. McCabe, of the Federation of Glass Workers, and President Homer Martin, of the United Automobile Workers of America, announced they would form a united front in any controversy with the motor car industry.

The Gordon Baking Co., of Detroit, obtained a blanket warrant charging 143 "sit-down" strikers in its plant with trespassing.

A force of deputy sheriffs stood guard at a bridge construction project at Hennepin, Ill., to prevent a recurrence of violence in a labor dispute. Two men were arrested and one injured in a clash there.

At the Troika

The "globe-trotting accordionist," Capt. Nick Hope.

Robber 'Gets Lost' In Chase; Is Seized

A fleet-footed colored robber yesterday ran six blocks only to lose his way in unfamiliar streets and wind up in the arms of the law.

Hazel J. Barrett, 42, who arrived here from Monroe, N. C., a few days ago, walked into a lunchroom in the 1200 block Fourteenth street northwest, saw no one in the place, pressed the keys of the cash register and left the store with more than $4.

The proprietor, John Abumides, ran into the shop when he heard the bell ring, and saw Barrett leave. He notified police and shouted to passersby to chase the man.

About 10 persons ran after the fleeing man and after a chase of about six blocks, Barrett ran into the arms of Lieut. John H. Fowler, of the robbery squad, who answered the radio alarm.

Fowler, with Detective Sergt. Robert Barrett, was talking to witnesses when the colored man came running around a corner near the store. At police headquarters, the robber said he was hungry and needed the money.

On the Air Today

It may interest those who selected "One Man's Family" as the outstandingly popular radio program in Washington, when The Post program preference poll was conducted in the summer of 1935, to know that this veteran script show will not be on top in the current Post poll, unless the trend of the first two days' returns takes a radical turn.

Nationally, Jack Benny is voted the most popular program. He will be among the top two or three favorites here, too, if the early poll returns are a fair sample. However, the symphony programs are practically even with Benny in first choices thus far.

It is interesting to note, after studying the first 75 forms returned, that the so-called "highbrow" listener goes overboard for one type of entertainment more than the non-classical addict. Few of those who obviously, by their selections, prefer light entertainment, complain about the serious programs. But—how the lovers of the symphony scold about anything and everything lower in standards than the Metropolitan Opera and the New York Philharmonic.

Several of the forms returned listed as the ten outstanding program choices the Metropolitan Opera, Chicago Opera and eight symphony orchestras. This seems offhand to this observer to be a rather heavy diet of off-office hours amusement.

However, every man to his own tastes. The poll is provided to bring just these variations in the listeners' tastes into their proper proportions. The first report on the poll will appear in next Sunday's Post (radio page). The poll form will be printed again next Sunday.

Fred Allen changes his amateur setup tonight for the first time in almost two years. No longer will the "amateurs" have to be amateurs. Professional performers, long on talent and ambition and short on opportunity, will be included. The decision was caused by the decreasing number of amateur applications and the apparent exhaustion of almost all of the good fledgling talent in the New York area. (According to New York's Radio Row for many months past, this dearth has never interfered with the Bowes alleged amateur show.)

Parents and 5 Children Trapped in Fire, Perish

McGregor, Iowa, Dec. 8 (AP).—Mr. and Mrs. Jay Anderson and five of their seven children burned to death here today when kerosene Mrs. Anderson used to start a fire exploded and turned their home into a blazing trap.

Thirteen-year-old Gertrude alone escaped from the burning two-story frame house. Her nightgown afire, she rolled in the snow until the flames were extinguished.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Marriage Now Seems Far From Mind of Man Who Once Solicited Widow's Hand; She Asks Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some years ago I was left a widow with children to support. I found a job shortly, eventually mastered it, and managed to support the children in comfortable, if very simple fashion. They are now grown and have always been the greatest comfort to me. Gradually we have been able to better ourselves financially, so that now we have a nice little apartment and the necessities of life, although it has taken years of unremitting effort to accomplish this.

• • • •

In the midst of our struggles, I met a fine man who seemed to realize our situation and who was willing to include the children in his life. We planned to be married within a year after our first meeting, and he was always most kind and considerate. However, he was not making much money at the time, and I felt it would be unfair to him to let him assume so much responsibility. I felt sure that in a few more years he would be better off financially, and we would stand more chance of finding happiness together. I was right, in one way. During the last few years he has made more money than ever before in his life and has enjoyed luxuries of travel and other advantages.

• • • •

Now marriage seems far from his mind, and certain relatives of his who fomerly demonstrated the greatest regard and admiration for me have completely reversed their attitude. Now that he is on his feet financially, they seem to visualize greater things for him than marriage to me. I suppose I should have shown more pride than to let things drift after taking this turn. I suppose I should have broken the relationship off without undue delay, but through suffering I have learned to be patient and tolerant, and I forgave much.

• • • •

But now I come to the point: If I continue to be kind and understanding, do you think things will change? Will he learn to appreciate what happiness could be ahead for us if he would change? He calls me every night and I see him twice a week, and I know if I were in trouble he would do anything in his power to help. He has proved that several times.

Not so long ago we agreed to seek other friends, at the same time remaining friends with each other. I felt at the time it would not work out, but tried to be big enough to give the suggestion a trial. He met others and so did I, but in the end we are back together. All our old friends apparently think everything has been ironed out, and they admire him so much I could never discuss the truth with them.

• • • •

It comes down to this: I do care deeply for him and I feel that he cares for me, in his selfish way. But we cannot go on in this way, for I have already spent too many years suffering, and I have so few years ahead in which to find a life companion. And I think it looks ridiculous for a woman nearing 40 to be flitting from beau to beau. Do you think there is any method I could adopt which would persuade this man to change, or are things definitely over? Or must the impulse to change rise from his own heart and not from another's coercion?

• • • •

Perhaps I should not look for other companionship than that of my children, but I know the day is coming when they will have homes and lives and interests of their own, and I never want them to feel sorry for their mother, or feel that because I am alone they must sacrifice their happiness to care for me. That would kill me. Please give me your honest advice and I will abide by it. Sincerely yours,

GRISELDA.

Suggested Tactics.

DEAR GRISELDA: If the man could be given a taste of what it would mean not to see you whenever he chooses, he might snap out of his present indifference and once more become an ardent advocate of immediate marriage. In order to do this, you might arrange a month's trip out of town; or you might acquire another suitor whose address seemed serious and in whom you displayed serious interest. I don't think talking to him or pleading with him will change the face of the situation in the least, except perhaps for the worse.

• • • •

If a trip out of town cannot be arranged and there are no likely suitors in your circle of friends, you may need to ask a three months' trial moratorium on meetings. Tell him you realize the relationship has grown stale from long accustomedness and that both of you would benefit from a respite in which to take stock of the fundamental nature of your dependence upon each other. Tell him it may be only habit and you wish to get at the truth. Don't let him know how much you care for him. Let him believe your state of mind is much the same as his seems to be. Let him suppose you are quite capable of living without him, for the time being and forever, if need be.

• • • •

A few weeks' banishment from your society will bring him back in a decidedly more lover-like frame of mind, if he cares for you at all. If he doesn't—and yet I really believe he cares for you more than he realizes or demonstrates—then you will have learned a painful truth which must be dealt with eventually, and which is better faced now than later.

M. H.

A Baffling Courtship.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Two years ago I met a man much older than I. After a few months he proposed to me, and although I was quite fond of him, I had not even dreamed of love between us. So, in order to let him down easily, I told him to ask me again a year later, as I could not consider marriage at the time because of certain obligations.

• • • •

We continued to see a lot of each other; he because I was a new face, probably, and I just because there was no one else to take me out. After knowing him better I fell deeply in love with him and during the past year must have revealed by my changed attitude toward him that I do love him. But he has never again spoken of marriage; only of love.

• • • •

I know he is in a position to marry if he desires, and several times have sounded him out, to no avail. After such sessions I have felt shame at almost proposing and have stopped seeing him for a time. But he continues to call as though nothing had happened and pretty soon we are seeing a lot of each other all over again. Although I have never proposed to him point-blank, he knows what is in my mind.

• • • •

I was wrong in one respect—in letting him see that I loved him before he declared himself. But what would you suggest that I do in order to learn his intentions? Shall I wait until after Christmas? Sincerely, DOWNHEARTED.

Competition Required.

DEAR DOWNHEARTED: If you know of any good reason why you should wait until after Christmas before launching a few feelers regarding the nature of this man's intentions, by all means defer action until the New Year. Obviously, the only way you can discover whether he still cherishes any half-hearted intention of marrying you is to give him competition in the form of other beaux. There just isn't any other way of doing it, short of asking him point-blank. Competition might rekindle a desire which perhaps waned because you have seemed too easily attainable. Whereas asking him point-blank might turn any lingering glow that remains into a cold gray ash.

Yule Gifts Can Transform the Season's Wardrobe

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

PERSONAL gifts of a casual nature, such as accessories to wear with business, school or shopping clothes, will undoubtedly be appreciated by the recipient this Christmas. Although the mode has gone elegant and luxurious, many women are clinging to the spectator sports type of costumes for all daytime occasions. Tweed suits, chic sweater outfits, sleek woolen frocks, blouses of jersey to wear with suits or skirts are all part of the daytime sayle scene. Such costumes gain immensely by accessories.

To accent any of these costumes there are numerous new things in the stores and shops and these are ideal as Christmas gifts. No fastidious woman ever had too many accessories. They are the magic touches that transform a simple outfit into something ultra smart. Many changes of accessories for one costume give the effect of an extensive wardrobe.

Jewelry Is Gay.

Since this is definitely a season when jewelry is considered a must, why not add costume jewelry to your shopping list? This may include massive wooden or metal pieces, gay colored beads and the like. Bracelets in pairs are an excellent gift idea; also necklaces and bracelet sets, clips or huge bar pins, monogrammed or jeweled pins to add a feminine touch to the sports shirts, and charm bracelets in the 1937 versions.

Handbags are appropriate gifts for anyone from the debutante to grandmother. For the business woman, they are incomparable. Bags of shiny leather, dull suede or shiny antelope, woolen fabrics in clever patterns and styles, patent leather, all these fit smartly into the daytime picture. To make the leather bags more personal, add swank monograms of metal or the newer idea, tortoise shell. Bags of fabric trimmed with leather and matched up with a leather belt make an acceptable twosome gift. Remember that belts this winter are much to the fore as an important accessory.

Gloves and Handbags.

Gloves, either in single pairs or wardrobes of a series of gloves for various occasions, would be a very thoughtful gift, particularly chosen for some member of your family. If your budget allows for the expenditure, a pair of gloves and matching handbag would be grand—a nice gift for mother. Gloves are particularly adapted to gift-giving this winter because they are smartly complicated with dressmaker touches, such as buckles bands, buttons, stitching. Plain slip ons in varying lengths are still in vogue and every wardrobe should include several pairs of these.

Handkerchiefs either as a separate gift to tuck in the corners of a box or inclosed in a greeting card, or given en masse, including linen for daytime and huge chiffon squares for evening, are always a good choice. Here again monograms are a lovely personal addition.

Scarfs in silk, velvet, woolen, fashioned in ascot, triangle or reefer styles, are other gift suggestions. A scarf and bag combination made of sheer woolen or a knitted fabric is an ensemble sponsored by the present mode and ideally adapted to gift giving, but be sure to select a color scheme to tie up with the recipient's costumes.

Coronation Bob Designed for Star

Hollywood hair stylists have been tearing their own hair trying to figure out how to made the informal bobbed-hair fashion appear formal enough for an occasion of such proportions as the coronation of King Edward of England. Perc Westmore has solved the problem with a beautiful coronation coiffeur which regal Kay Francis introduced just before departing for Europe.

Miss Francis' hair is parted in the center and brushed back from the forehead and behind the ears. A heavy braid, 12 inches long, holds the hair down smoothly and is high enough to simulate a tiara. The back hair is then arranged in two clusters of curls, one set being directly back of the braid in a slightly higher line. The other cluster is at the back of the neck, so that tiny ringlets cover only a part of the ears.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WHEN A LADY keeps finding herself up on a chair with a yard stick, it's a sign that there's going to be new curtains some place before long.

George Brewster's wife, Maude, has been up to just such antics lately and we've just gotten the whole story from her. Incidentally, they built their own new home last spring, but they used a lot of their old furnishings at first till they had time to catch their breath from the expense of building.

"Now we're ready to do things to the inside of the house," Maude explained. "Especiallly the living room. The rug is a mulberry broadloom, which we'll keep, and the wall paper is a creamy colored scenic with shades of brown, with a whisper of green in the pattern. We're getting new draperies and curtains the first thing, and we're planning on adding a spinet piano and a secretary, preferably in mahogany. What else would you suggest?"

"A lovely shade of green for the draperies—rather an apple green, only deeper and softer," we chimed in. "Then a sofa in the same color, and one upholstered chair in beige and one in a warm vigorous floral on a mulberry ground. Cream color for the glass curtains and for the lamps and accessories. One extra chair—an open arm model—might be useful; have it in old gold, and we'd add occasional tables of mahogany.

Send a stamped, self-addressed envelope for Miss Boykin's bulletin, "Prescriptions for Living Rooms."

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Dec. 8.

THERE are always giggles a plenty even in the midst of Manhattan's most outrageous madness. The town positively guarantees at least one good titter a day, a. l adds the locally indispensable "absolutely." And after long and prayerful thought I don't think any cheerier note is struck here than the frequent visits of Hollywood dollbabies to this preoccupied yet ever pop-eyed hamlet.

ALICE HUGHES.

Take the recent visit of long-legged, lovely Kay Francis, one of my favorite gals, on and off the screen. She met the boy friend, Writer Delmar Daves, at the Newark Airport with one of the finest hug-and-kiss exhibitions that osculatory spot has ever seen, and as soon as she had caught her breath she told reporters that she would never marry again—oh dear me, no! And when she and her Delmar were found to be sailing to Europe on the Normandie, lovely Kay gave a good old studio start and chirped, "My, but it certainly is nice to find a friend on board!" Neither, obviously, had the faintest notion that the other would be aboard the mighty French canoe! . . .

It's so cute, this game the movie cuties play! Compared with them, an ostrich is a genius at deception! And then Dream-Boy Francis Lederer, the Czech and double-check, got off the Century 'tother morning with little Margo, of "Winterset" fame. Engaged? My, my! Margo's eyebrows almost met the hair-line! "We're very good friends, but we've only known each other a few months! He's so nice!" The flashlights boomed.

Of course, we're used to these didoes by now—too often have we heard these little speeches, only to learn that the couple have been married for six months. But the children from Hollywood never give up! They love to play!

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Speaking of Kay, I think she rates her "best-dressed movie actress" title, awarded by a jury of her press agents. Kay has both a notably fine taste in duds, and the figger to wear them—even though I'm afraid she's getting a bit too thick here and there. She showed me a natural gray broadtail coat of her own design—a beauty, with double-handed collar and cuffs of silver fox, tight at the waist, and a very full skirt. She looked a million in it, and as we issued from her hotel I could see that every man within eye-shot was rocked back on his heels by the vision.

• • • •

I'm darned sorry that the romance of Rosa Ponselle, the Metlark, and Carle Jackson, of Baltimoh, has been jinxed by the newspapermen, who put the hex on it by referring to the happy man as "the ideal husband." What an unbearable handicap for a young fellow in love! The consensus of the world's best thought is that the "ideal husband" is rarer than the Panda which Mrs. Harkness caught in Mongolia. Poor Jack, and Lucky Jackson, for Rosa's darling! . . .

• • • •

Broadway's night life is now rounded out and complete with the arrival of the Club Yumuri, a Cuban hot-spot right smack in the theater district. If you want to hear, in addition to rhumbas and tangoes, lovely sad Latin songs hummed and strummed by an inspired quartet of string-pickers, I suggest you look in there. . . .

• • • •

Local first-nighters are in a state! Connie Bennett, who was known as a menace to playgoers a few years ago, arrived at the opening of Noel Coward's little plays here the other night with her handsome shadow, Gilbert Roland, and was actually calm and gracious when there was a mix-up about her seats! In 1931 she would have blown the roof off the theater with a dandy Bennett tantrum. Gosh, does Connie soften and grow sweet? And why? . . .

Night-restaurant cameramen find life dull. The younger Vanderbilt clan, their aces in the hole, are already at Palm Beach, Alfred G., George and his wife, and peach Mimi Baker, their half-sister. What—no Vanderbilts? Oh, dear!

Our famed Women's Symphony, conducted by Antonia Brico, has begun its season—with ten men sawing and tooting with the ladies, to the great alarm of feminine diehards! Is nothing exclusive? Must men chisel in everywhere? Conductress Brico says, "I'm a musician, not a feminist. I've already proved the competence of women. Who plays the music is of little import." Just the same, Tonia, have you let us gals down?

Today's HEALTH TALK

By
Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Many of us sparsely provided with hair spend our hard-earned ducats to get it, while others desire its removal from certain parts of the body. Few persons realize what a dirt catcher hair is and any one with heavy locks will need to shampoo the head often to remove the accumulation. In men particularly hairs on the back of the neck supply ready avenues by means of which bacteria may enter the skin.

The epidermis itself harbors many microbes—this regardless of frequent scrubbings. One cannot walk a block in the open air without having dust—laden with organisms—settle upon the exposed parts of the body. If the skin is irritated by collars, coats, furs, etc., germs may find their way down along the shaft of the hair to the vicinity of the bulb (root), where, in a warm location, richly supplied with nutriment, they may grow.

Every hair emerges from a pocket within the skin. Whenever inflammation develops in the region of the bulb we call it a boil. The cause is usually the staphylococcus. If we have lost sleep or have allowed the resistance to drop a bit, the invaders may not be destroyed by the white cells of the blood. A skin abscess is the result.

What are the early signs? There is first a sense of itching and discomfort. When pressed the site will be painful and sensitive. As the tension increases around the hair the pain may become throbbing or persistent. Sometimes the patient will complain of a rise in temperature, a loss of appetite, or even chilly sensations. If there is much absorption the lymph glands in the vicinity will become enlarged in an attempt to filter out the infection so that it shall not enter the blood.

At no time should a boil be squeezed and this rule applies to pimples of all sorts regardless of character or location. In the acute stage the swelling should not be opened surgically even though the presence of pus is obvious. Many dangerous illnesses have been ushered in because of the surgical incision of these abscesses, permitting not only bacteria but toxins to enter the vein.

Pineapple Candy Recipe Captures Contest Prize

By Rebekah Blake.
The Post Food Editor.

CHRISTMAS CANDY must surely be on the minds of housekeepers in a big way, for there were recipes of every kind and consistency sent in for The Post's Christmas candy recipe contest.

There were many delicious ones for chocolate fudge and sea foam, as well as ones of more original title and make-up.

The first prize of $3 was awarded to Miriam V. Barnes, of Arlington, Va., for her recipe for pineapple candy.

The second prize, $2, was won by Mrs. Charles G. Lueck, 6237 Thirtieth street northwest, for her unusual Yule Logs; the third prize, $1, went to Mrs. Ony P. Joness, 1506 Upsher street northwest, for recipe for orange candy; the fourth prize of $1, went to Mrs. C. J. Hargis, of Vienna, Va., for her recipe for jelly squares, and the fifth prize, $1, was won by Mrs. H. R. Peterson, 4115 Wisconsin avenue, for her recipe for lollipops.

Here is Miss Barnes' recipe:

Pineapple Candy.

1 cup sugar
1 cup crushed pineapple (juice and fruit)
2 tablespoons white karo
24 marshmallows
3 cups pecans
2 teaspoons butter
Vanilla

Mix sugar, pineapple and syrup in a heavy saucepan and cook, stirring occasionally, until a soft ball forms when dropped in cold water. Remove from stove and add butter, marshmallows, pecans and vanilla. Beat until creamy and very stiff. Pour into buttered pan and cut when candy is firm.

Mrs. Lueck's recipe:

Yule Logs.

1½ cups sugar
½ cup water
3 tablespoons butter
Pinch of cream of tartar

Put these together in a pan and cook until the mixture forms a soft ball when dropped in water. Remove from the stove. Stir in 1 tablespoon of honey. Then add:

¼ cup chopped nuts
¼ cup chopped dates
¼ cup chopped raisins
¼ cup chopped figs
¼ cup chopped candied cherries

Turn the mixture out on a board. Knead till soft and workable. Shape into a long roll, about 2 inches thick. Set aside to ripen. When ready, cut in half-inch slices.

Dip the slices in chocolate and top with nuts or cut up green citron into thin slices to look like wee holly leaves and add small red candies for the berries to give the slices a Christmas look.

Mrs. Jones' recipe follows:

Orange Candy.

Boil together four cups granulated sugar, 4 tablespoons white corn syrup, 2½ cups boiling water until it forms a firm ball when dropped in cold water. Stir at beginning until sugar is dissolved. Then cover for 2 or 3 minutes until boiling has covered the kettle. Take off and cover and boil rapidly until the firm ball stage is reached. Do not stir after taking off the cover.

Have a large platter or marble slab ready and pour syrup gradually onto the slab or platter. While syrup is cooking grate orange peel enough for 1 teaspoon full. When syrup is cooled enough to handle, add orange peel and stir with wooden spoon until it forms a firm mass. Knead with hands until a creamy mass adding orange juice to thin if necessary. Pack in stone jar or bowl for several hours. Take out, dividing the mass, putting 1-3 in bowl over hot water to melt. Form the remaining 2-3 into shapes desirable for dipping. When fondant is melted add yellow coloring and more orange juice if too thick. Leave over hot water but place on table where dipping is to be done. Dip the shaped pieces; roll in toasted coconut and place on oiled or parafine paper to dry.

Mrs. Hargis' recipe:

Jelly Squares.

1 package gelatin
1 cup cold water
4 cups boiling water
Juice of ½ lemon
1 square chocolate
½ cup orange juice
¾ cup finely chopped nuts
½ cup finely chopped candied fruit
Peppermint and clove extract
Pink and green vegetable coloring

Soak the gelatin in cold water five minutes. Dissolve in boiling water. Add sugar, stirring until dissolved, boil slowly 15 minutes. Divide into four parts. To one add three tablespoons lemon juice and five drops peppermint extract. Color green and turn into small pan wet with ice water. To the next add the orange juice and candied fruit. To the third, add the chocolate, shaved and melted, and the nuts. Flavor the fourth with clove and other red. Let stand overnight. The next day, cut in blocks and dust with confectioner's sugar. Easily made and a wholesome confection for children.

Mrs. Peterson's recipe follows:

Lollipops.

2 Cups sugar
2-3 cup crystal karo
1 cup water
1 tablespoon vinegar
⅛ teaspoon oil of peppermint
Vegetabl coloring

Put sugar, corn sirup and water into a saucepan and cook, stirring until the sugar is dissovled. Cover and let the candy boil for a few minutes until the steam has washed any sugar crystals away from the side of the pan. Remove cover and boil without stirring until it reaches the "crack" stage. Remove candy from fire, adding coloring and flavoring, stirring only enough to mix. Pour candy in the bottom of buttered gem pans to shape the lollipops. Use life-savers for eyes, jelly beans for a nose and a shred of candied cherry for the mouth. Put these on while the lollipops are soft enough to hold them. Remove from pans just before they are hard and insert skewers in backs.

Paris Rules Skirts To Rise 2 Inches Above the Mid-Calf

Paris (U.P.).—The mid-season collections have established the shorter skirt. The knee-length skirts of ten years ago will never be revived, it is hoped, but Paris has lifted skirts a good two inches above the mid-calf line.

Even evening skirts have been slightly elevated—usually just in front, but at some dress houses skirts are ankle length all around.

The most graceful skirts are those which end in a tier of ruffles or pleating that is lifted in an inverted V in front to show the ankles and ornate evening sandals. One dress house uses Eastern draped skirts that are caught up at the side seams to show the legs that are banded in broad openwork silver anklets.

Cake Is Selected For Post's Recipe Contest This Week

When we think of Christmas, we think of mistletoe, holly, stockings before the fireplace and—a luscious big cake on the sideboard.

As you are collecting your recipes for your day of Christmas cake baking you may find one that will win a prize in The Post's contest this week. Perhaps it is an unusually interesting one that has been handed down in your family for generations. Or it may be some modern time saver that would interest a busy housewife.

At any rate, type it or write it clearly together with your name and address, and send it to Rebekah Blake, The Post's Food Editor, so that she will receive it not later than Saturday morning.

A $3 award will be given for the best recipe received, one of $2 for the second best, and three of $1 each for additional interesting recipes.

Frankfurters Tasty.

Cooked frankfurters make a toothsome stuffing for green peppers, when they are mixed with cooked rice, a bit of onion and a dab of tomato. Bake them slowly and serve as the main course.

Now there is prepared stuffing for poultry. This time and trouble saving product is made of seasoned bread crumbs, and need only be mixed with milk, water or meat stock. You can add sauteed mushrooms, chopped celery and almonds, chestnuts or that handed-down-from-grandmother specialty to give the stuffing your own magic touch.

Recipe Offers Fruit Cakes Of New Type

Lighter, Moist Delicacy Now Available With Minimum of Effort.

HERE is something new! A recipe for fruit cake that is not as heavy or as strong in flavor as most of the recipes that you have been using for years.

If you have been looking for a lighter fruit cake recipe, your quest may now come to an end, for this cake has a moist consistency much like the flavorful applesauce cake, yet contains all of the holiday fruits and nuts that are necessary in all fruit cakes. And another improvement: this cake does not require the long baking of most cakes of its kind.

Fruit Cake.
(Soft and Moist.)

1 cup sugar
1 cup raisins, cooked and drained
1 cup water melon preserves
(You may use part preserves and part candied grapefruit peel and citron)
1 cup chopped dates
1 cup chopped nuts
1 cup unsweetened applesauce
2 cups unsifted flour
1 teaspoon each of cinnamon and cocoa
½ cup lard or butter
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon soda
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon cloves
2 eggs

Combine ingredients and bake in a deep pan for 1 hour, 15 minutes at 350 degrees F. This will make a 3-pound cake.

Ivy Favorite Plant.

The ivy is one of the most beautiful and obliging indoor plants. It will thrive in situations where other plants fail to take hold, and is particularly suitable for shaded windows, or situations inside a room where little or no sun reaches it. For this reason it is a favorite plant for apartment dwellers whose only windows face north, or are shaded by buildings.

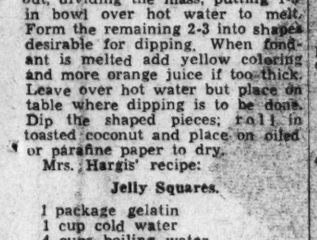
Low Temperature Most Economical For Cooking Meat

If you think that you are saving time and money when you roast your meat quickly, you are mistaken, for it may mean economy in time, but it is actually an extravagance in both meat and fuel, according to cookery experts of the State colleges and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Two rib roasts were used in an experiment to prove this point. This experiment is being shown at the International Live Stock Exposition now being held in Chicago.

Two similar roasts were cooked to the rare stage. One roast was cooked in a 450 Fahrenheit oven; the other at 250 Fahrenheit. The first roast lost 4 pounds while the second lost only 1½ pounds. The ribs roasted at the low temperature were juicier, more uniformly done, and more attractive in appearance.

It took more time in the oven at the low temperature, but 50 per cent less gas. A low temperature causes little or no spattering of the oven, such as takes place when the heat is turned on full blast.



GUARANTEED RELIEF FROM CONSTIPATION

Common constipation is usually due to meals low in "bulk." Pills and drugs give only temporary relief. The sensible thing to do is to put "bulk" back into your meals.

Millions of people get this needed "bulk" in a delicious cereal: Kellogg's ALL-BRAN. Its "bulk" is much like that in leafy vegetables. Within the body, it absorbs moisture, forms a soft mass, gently cleanses the system.

Some years ago, an investigation was made among thousands of ALL-BRAN users. 98 per cent found it satisfactory. Only 2 per cent had the type of constipation that would not respond to ALL-BRAN.

ALL-BRAN is guaranteed. Try it a week. If not satisfactory, your money will be refunded by the Kellogg Company.

Just eat two tablespoonfuls daily, either as cereal or in cooked dishes. ALL-BRAN is sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Miss Ethel Worthington, daughter of Mrs. Ralph Worthington, yesterday afternoon made her bow to Washington society at a large tea at which her mother entertained at their home in Massachusetts avenue.

The rooms of the house, once the residence of Mary Roberts Rinehart, were bright with a gay profusion of flowers.

Miss Worthington and her mother received in the drawing room before a background of palms and ferns. The new entrant to formal society was gowned in a georgette frock of soft-shaded blue, made with a high neck and short puffed sleeves, and carried a bouquet of roses, a gift of her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Adam K. Luke, of New York, who were unable to be present for the occasion. She also wore a wrist corsage of lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Worthington was in a gown of Dubonnet velvet with a blouse of chiffon over silver cloth and a corsage of white orchids.

The house, which extends in a series of interesting rooms, afforded an ideal place for such a party as yesterday's, where hundreds came during the hours from 5 to 7. At no time did there seem too large a crowd.

The library, down two steps from the drawing room, held particular interest because it is the room in which Mrs. Rinehart is said to have done much of her writing. There, as elsewhere, there were many flowers. Behind a screen at one end, cocktails were mixed.

On the opposite side of the hall in the dining room, in a small music room at one end, and in the other rooms, refreshments were being served. Palms and ferns were banked in the windows of the dining room, a great loving cup holding white and pink lilies decorated the center of the table and ivory tapers burned in silver candelabra. The loving cup was among the trophies which had been won by the debutante's late father.

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend was one of the friends of Mrs. Worthington who assisted at the tea table. Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman and Mrs. Malcolm Matheson also were among those early at the tea table, and later were assisted by Mrs. Brickinridge Long, Mrs. Mark L. Bristol, Mrs. Archibald Davis and Mrs. Breckinridge Bayne. Mrs. Bayne, with Mr. Bayne, expects to leave for a short visit in Pittsburgh and from there will go to Arizona for the remainder of the winter.

Miss Alice Noel Tuckerman in a turquoise blue frock with a rose-colored belt, was among the debutantes assisting. Others included Miss Margot Garrett, who wore a taffeta frock of rust brocaded in gold; Miss Gloria Grosvenor in a violet gown; Miss Anne Child, in blue; Miss Carlile Porter, in ice-blue satin, and Miss Ruth Dove, in blue.

Among the post-debutantes were Miss Emily Davis, Miss Marguerite Hagner and Miss Angelica Lloyd, who arrived together toward the latter part of the afternoon; Miss Peggy Matheson, Miss Martha Davidge, Miss Eleanor Flood, Miss Stella Stapleton, Miss Sally Mitchell LeFevre and Miss Christine Long.

Miss Judith Black, of Pelham Manor, N. Y., wearing a striking gown of white satin with a red scarf at the neck, and Miss Cecil Gibson, of Baltimore, who are here as guests of Mrs. Worthington, also assisted.

Mrs. Homer S. Cummings was among the guests and wore a costume of black, her blouse figured in gold, and a little veil on her small black hat. Mrs. Matheson her daughters, Miss Matheson, Mrs. William Arnold, who was with Mr. Arnold, and Mrs. Frank S. Hight, with Mr. Hight and her son, Mr. Malcolm Matheson, jr., with Mrs. Matheson, jr., were all there, as were Mr. and Mrs. Aldrich Dudley. The Matheson's estate, Wellington, and the Dudley's, Andalusia, is near Deepwood, purchased some time ago by Mrs. Worthington.

Among other guests were the Ambassador of Cuba and his daughter, Mme. Schaltter; the Minister of Siam and Mme. Rajamaitri, Dr. and Mrs. William Jennings Price, the Solicitor General and Mrs. Stanley Reed, and their son, Mr. John Reed; Mrs. Joshua Evans and her son, Mr. Joshua Evans, jr., who left early to attend his classes at George Washington University; Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin and her son, Mr. MacDonald Goodwin; Mrs. Wilbur R. Hubbard, with her daughter, Mrs. George M. Morris; Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis, Col. and Mrs. Allen Burdette, Mrs. George Barnett, who has just returned from a short stay in New York; Gen. and Mrs. Fred Coleman, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Owsley, Mrs. William S. Culbertson, in a frock of red with a fox cape; Mrs. Jean R. L. de Sibour, in a beige tunic frock trimmed in deeper brown; Mr. Kurt Hetzel, who plays this afternoon at the concert for the benefit of the House of Mercy, and Baroness von Pagenhardt.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

Blessings brighten as they take their flight—at any rate that is what the Veverkas think. When they first came here the Washington climate—fickle and plunging as it always is—was anything but pleasing, but as time went on the Czechoslovakian Minister, his wife and daughter, Nella, became used to is. Now, they are back in Europe—in Vienna. And, strange as it seems, they miss the bright days here and find the European weeks made up of gray, uncertain days.

Nella, who was so extremely popular in Washington, is even more so over there and her calendar is heavily cross-marked with engagement reminders.

So, the Ramsdell Cummingses have not gone to Peru yet, but are making their home in San Francisco in a very swanky apartment on Vallejo street, atop a hill with a view that takes in the bay, its bridges and the skyline of S. F.

The head of the house has taken to wearing a monocle, so we hear, and it should be very becoming. He always did look like a diplomat from foreign shores, anyway. It seems as though Mrs. Hamilton Condon (Mrs. C.'s mother) has just purchased a huge and gorgeous yact, and one of the first voyages it will make will be a cruise upon which Ramsdell and Jane will be the passengers.

Edward Lohse, who is tall, gray-eyed and looks as though he should be fond of skiing, not only suits the part but actually is an ardent follower of the thrilling sport. Many Washingtonians look forward each year to the few weeks when they can embark early in the mornings on trains taking them up into the Pennsylvania mountains, where they can skii to their heart's content till dusk shoos them home again. But none of this for Edward. He is planning on January 7 or thereabouts to sail for Europe and do his skiing in the Bavarian Alps.

Mrs. James Schneider, we are willing to wager, has one of the most unusual lounging robes in this city. Anniversary Party Given for Learys

Sons and Daughter Are Hosts at Shoreham Luncheon.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Burton Leary were guests of honor at a luncheon given yesterday at the Shoreham by their daughter and three sons in celebration of their golden wedding anniversary. The hosts were Mr. and Mrs. John H. Small, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Leary, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Whitney Leary and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Carvel Leary.

The gold motif was carried out in the table decorations of gold-color roses and in the gifts, monogrammed in gold. The letters in gold, 1886-1936, topped the white wedding cake, on which also were a miniature bride and bridegroom.

Other relatives from Baltimore present included Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Onion, Mrs. Frank Onion, Mr. Richard Carvel, jr., and Mr. Robert G. Loy.

Representative Garrett Is Visitor to Capital

Representative Clyde Garrett, of Eastland, Tex., who succeeded Representative Thomas L. Blanton, of Abilene, Tex., in the last election, is in Washington for a few days and is staying at the Roosevelt Hotel.

Representative Garrett will return to Texas the last of the week. With Mrs. Garrett he will come to Washington next month. They will take an apartment at the Roosevelt for the winter.

British Embassy Aide Is Host At Afternoon Cocktail Party

One Guest Gets Lost in Wilds of Rock Creek Park on Way, She Relates; Miss Tirrell Entertains, Singer Fails to Arrive.

By Dudley Harmon.

It seems that local taxi drivers reach a high point in vagueness when one says to them "2601 Thirty-sixth place," and at least one guest did a lot of unintentional exploring before arriving at the small and informal cocktail party given yesterday afternoon by the Commercial Secretary of the British Embassy and Mrs. Henry Frank Heywood.

After an unexpected tour through the mazes of Rock Creek Park, however, she arrived at the charming little street just off Massachusetts avenue where the Heywoods make their home, and found their house ablaze with light and a congenial gathering within.

Assisting Mrs. Heywood in receiving was her sister, Miss Susan Headley, who has been visiting them since early in October. Miss Headley, although urged by her friends to stay for the inaugural, is leaving Sunday for New York, and plans to sail Wednesday to her home in England.

The British contingent in Washington was well represented yesterday at the party. Among those present were Lady Marler, wife of the Canadian Minister; the Minister of the Union of South Africa, Mr. Ralph William Close; Mr. and Mrs. Ronald McDonald, of the Canadian Legation, and Mr. Denys Smith, of the London Post.

Others there included: Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, in a red crepe frock with accordion pleated sleeves; the Naval Attache of the Italian Embassy, and the Marchioness of Sant'Orsola; Mrs. Peyton March; Mrs. Harold Hinton, in a black frock with a matching hat; Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie, and Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, with her sister, Countess de Castellane, and her daughter, Miss Laura Tuckerman, in a rose-colored suit, trimmed with black fur; Mr. Ralph Snowden Hill and Mr. Clarence Hewes.

Another party yesterday, a great success in spite of the fact that the guest of honor was at the last minute prevented from arriving, was the tea given by Miss Dorothy Tirrell for Mr. Thomas L. Thomas. Mr. Thomas is going to sing this afternoon at the concert for the benefit of the House of Mercy, but unfortunately didn't arrive in Washington until midnight last night, just about 6 hours too late for the party.

Miss Tirrell wore a dress which she designed herself—black crepe skirt with a white chiffon bodice, cut low in back and with a corsage of roses at the neckline. She spent last summer at Schroon Lake, the New York music colony, and while there became acquainted with Mr. Thomas.

Present yesterday was Miss Betty Seagle, whose father is a well-known teacher of music. He arrives today to attend the concert, and while here will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Townsend.

Others noted were Frau Scholz, wife of the First Secretary of the German Embassy; Mr. William K. Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, Mrs. Edgar Snow and Mrs. John Proctor, who poured tea and dispensed lunch; Mme. de Prado in a black astrakhan coat and hat trimmed with the same fur, and Mrs. Hugh Butler.

Kindler Dinner Tables Taken

Mme. Covert to Sing at Fete Honoring Conductor of Orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Murray have taken a table for the dinner Monday evening in honor of Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra. The dinner, which will be given at the Mayflower, will be followed by a brief program of music, when Mr. and Mrs. Murray's daughter, Mme. Vera Covert, dramatic soprano, will sing.

Mme. Covert sang recently with the National Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Kindler conducting, at its annual concert in Reading, Pa.

The dinner is sponsored by the Washington Music Teachers Association as a tribute to Dr. Kindler for his successful work with the orchestra during the last six years. Others who have taken tabes through Mrs. Walter Hilton are the former United States Ambassador to Argentina and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Emory Scott Land, Mr. and Mrs. Reeve Lewis, Mr. Frank Steele, vice president of the Arts Club of Washington and secretary of the Sons of the American Revolution, and Mrs. Steele; Mrs. Etta Schaid Wells, Mr. and Mrs. Milton King, the Cremona String Quartet and Mount Vernon Seminary, which has reserved two tables, at one of which Mrs. A. K. Payne will preside as hostess.

English Speaking Union Holds Meeting Today

Members of the Washington branch of the English Speaking Union will hold their annual meeting this afternoon at the Willard Hotel from 4:30 to 6. Tea will be served following the business session.

Among those who will act as hostesses are Mrs. A. B. Houghton, Mrs. W. D. MacDougal, Mrs. Mae Hamiltone, Mrs. H. A. Strong, Mrs. Kauffmann, Mrs. Charles Richmond and Mrs. Luke Wilson.

Society Set Out in Force For Concert

Chill Weather Brings Out Wraps of Ermine, Mink and Sable.

By Marylyn Reve.

Most of Washington society was out last evening to attend the concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, under the skilled leadership of Eugene Ormandy. Out of the crisp, chill evening women snugly wrapped in ermine, mink, velvets and brocades and their escorts, attired in black and white, hurried into the warm and brilliantly lighted Constitution Hall.

A very prompt audience it was, arriving well before the appointed hour to take their places in the boxes along the edge or in the central rows.

Among the first to arrive were the new Minister of Czechoslovakia, Mr. Vladimir Hurban, and Mme. Hurban, who had only yesterday morning reached Washington from New York. She was costumed in black, with a long, handsome cape of silver fox. With them were Mrs. F. Wilkinson Bunker, whose gown was of two shades of green satin fashioned with a graceful scarf effect across the shoulders; the counselor of the legation, Dr. Josef Nemecek, and the first secretary of the legation, Mr. Otakar Kabelac.

In a nearby box sat Mme. Saito, petite wife of the Ambassador of Japan. She had on a black lace gown over which she wore a coat of black and gold brocade, collared in sable. With her were the Counselor and Mme. Yoshizawa, the latter wearing black crepe of simple design with an interesting arrangement of narrow straps from the shoulders caught together at the neck with a large brooche.

Miss Mable Boardman, wearing a gown of vivid green satin and a handsome mink coat, had as her guests the Ambassador of Belgium and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, the latter was wearing a gown of black velvet made with shirred wing effects over the shoulders.

On the opposite side of the hall sat the Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye. She was wearing black crepe with a long necklace of pearls and a wrap of mink. A few boxes away sat their daughter, Mlle. Marie Therese de Laboulaye, who was costumed in black also.

Near them were the Minister of Hungary and Mme. Pelenyi; Miss Dorothy Tirrell in old rose velvet with a scarf of ermine; the Minister of Switzerland and Mme. Peter, the latter in black ribbed crepe; and Dr. and Mrs. Oscar Albertini and their niece, Senorita Marguerita Montero.

Others who were in the audience last evening were the First Secretary of the Ecuadorian Embassy and Senora de Mantilla-Ortega; Mme. Oumansky, wife of the Counselor of the Soviet Embassy, who entertained a group of friends in her box; Mrs. Harry Fulton, in orchid crepe, who had as her guests, Mrs. Lynn Talley, wearing fuchsia velvet with a matching headband, Miss Martha Talley, who was attired in white with a black velvet wrap which had a wide collar of ermine, Miss Carry Roper Fulton, in sea green lace, and Mr. Robert Fulton.

Also there were Mrs. James Helm, wearing black crepe with touches of white at the neck and down the long open-work sleeves; Dr. and Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, Miss Alice Graeme, Mr. Kurt Hetzel and the Second Secretary of the Brazilian embassy, Mr. Decio de Moura.

The Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Valadimir Hurban, who arrived in Washington from New York only Monday night, celebrated their arrival in the capital by attending the concert at Constitution Hall last evening with the Counselor of the legation, Dr. Josef Nemecek, and Mrs. Frances Wilkinson Bunker, soon to be wed to the Italian Ambassador to Moscow, Signor Augusto Rosso.

Lost and Found

By Priscilla Wayne

"Haven't I, teacher?" the girl mocked. "Haven't I? Is it possible that I've left out some of the gruesome details? Do you want to know just where I lost the heel of my shoe and fell and sprained my ankle and why? I wish I knew the answers myself, especially the why, but I don't, so if I have to live without the information, I guess you will too."

No Smile.

But George did not smile at her banter. "You know what I mean."

"I'm not a mind reader—and I don't know."

"Tell me, then, why you started up the mountain trail alone in a coupe. Tell me what you were running away from."

If George had expected that sort of tactics to win his point he was completely mistaken. For the first time Doris was angry, so angry that her black eyes fairly blazed with rage and her cheeks flamed flags of red.

"If you wish to be impertinent then two of us can play at the same game. Why are you hiding away up here in the mountains? Why do you pretend you aren't a physician when you are? Why do you object to having me, a mere stranger, call you Doctor, when you have that title, a title you ought to be proud to acknowledge?"

"Perhaps," George said cuttingly. "Perhaps that is my own business."

"Perhaps it is," the girl said and her voice held as much dignity as his had mustered. "And perhaps my life before you found me on the trail is my own business, too. Ever think of that?"

"Perhaps your life is—is open to criticism," George ventured. "Perhaps it—perhaps it hasn't been lived within—within the law. Perhaps it is——"

"That's absurd and you know it," the girl said calmly. At least her voice sounded calm, although she was raging inwardly.

And George looked at her. Suddenly it seemed as thoroughly absurd to him as it evidently seemed to her. "I beg your pardon," he said quite humbly.

"I'm not absolutely certain that I grant it," she said, buttering a bit of toast. "You're a queer person. I may be queer, too. But if we're going to be obliged to live under the same roof for even 24 hours let's be as decent and civil about it to each other as we can."

CHAPTER FIVE.

The day was an armed truce. George realized that and so did the girl. Outwardly civil to each other, inwardly questioning and surmising, the two of them occupied the living room during the entire long, snow pelted day.

Patrick returned presently from his prowling, dashing in with his thick coat covered with great snow flakes. He nuzzled the girl's hand and trotted over to stand in front of George who sat near the fireplace.

Teck, assisted by another brown man who spoke never a word, had carried great logs into the fireplace and building up a bounding crackling fire.

"Go over there, Patrick," George commanded, "and get warm and dry off. You've got more ambition than I have. Out on a day like this. Twelve or 15 inches of snow must have fallen during the night."

"Yes. It would be," George agreed. "And the snow hasn't stopped falling yet."

"And no sign of the wind abating?"

"No."

Then Doris went back to her book and George continued his pretense of reading. That was a typical conversation between them and as pointless as most they held together during the long day that seemed as though it would never end.

Doris was greatly disappointed that the radio was out of order. At least that would have been a diversion. She had asked George to turn it on early in the day and he evaded. Later he explained to her that for some unaccountable reason something was wrong with the radio and he didn't know exactly what it was that was wrong.

Pretty Brunette.

Teck, overhearing the conversation, could have told the strange young visitor that the main trouble right now with the radio was that his master had asked him to disconnect it from its basement electricity plug.

Teck might also have told her that when her host disappeared several times during the day, sometimes remaining out of the living room for more than an hour at a time, that he had a small radio in another part of the house tuned to the police calls and was listening avidly to everything he could hear about the disappearance of a girl from Albuquerque the afternoon before.

That girl, he learned again, was a very pretty brunette, not very tall and quite slim. She wore a gray fur coat of an expensive make and her name was Polly Donnelly. She was wanted because she had been in a car of gangsters that held up a bank in Santa Fe the morning before this day.

It was believed that she had been the one to send the bullet through the heart of the bank cashier. She was young and innocent appearing but, the police warned, officers must be on their guard against her. This Polly was a gun moll, a desparate woman of the underworld. She was wanted, dead or alive.

After such a secret seance with the radio George would go back into the living room wher his pretty young guest lay curled up on the couch pretending to read.

Not Nervous.

There, playing at the game of pretending to read himself, he would think through the maze of contradictory ideas that raced through his brain.

This girl was no gun-moll, no gangster's girl. Why she couldn't be and still have the evident breeding, the quiet charm that this girl possessed. Thinking that perhaps she did not notice he scrutinized her carefully. Her little scratched hands were not nervous. She turned the pages of the book slowly and with perfect calm.

Those hands of hers. When had he seen hands so beautifully molded and so artistically expressive? Her long, graceful fingers ended in beautifully manicured, well shaped nails. She used a dainty, fragrant polish, not the violent vulgar red or even black that women of less culture, such as a gun moll, would use.

Only a girl who thought clean, pure thoughts could have the Madonna shaped face that this girl possessed or the fearless, expressive eyes that gazed straight at one.

No—it was impossible to think that this was the girl the authorities sought.

And yet there were so many bits of incriminating evidence. She was little and slim. She had gorgeous, fluffy black hair and big, eloquent black eyes. She bore unmistakable signs of intelligence and good breeding. No person, to see her casually, could believe anything but the best of her.

And yet wasn't that exactly what the radio voice had warned against? The radio warning said repeatedly, "Polly is seemingly a woman of refinement and culture. When last seen she wore a gray fur coat, of an expensive make."

George could not forget that Teck had put a little fur coat of an expensive make on the coat rack in the hall closet.

The little coat was torn by the cactus thorns and soiled but it was undoubtedly a gray fur coat of a very expensive make.

For no reason at all and with positively no good sense to the act, he went out into the entrance hall and there, behind closed doors, took the gray fur coat from its hangar and regarded it thoughtfully.

Gone So Long.

Then he did a very strange thing. He couldn't have explained why he did it himself. He took the coat to another room in a distant part of the house and locked it away in a rarely used closet.

Coming back to the living room he found Doris playing solitaire. She had asked Teck to find her a deck of cards and now she shuffled them abstractedly.

"I thought you might have trudged down into the village to give me up to the authorities," she laughed, "you've been gone so long."

Her attempt at a joke dismayed him. He hoped she hadn't seen the start he made at her words. "I'll do that tomorrow," he bantered. "What police station shall I call?"

"Any you like. Policemen like to rescue fair maidens in distress, don't they?"

"That's the legend," he said, wondering. If this girl were really Polly, whom the authorities trailed so hotly right now, how could she joke and banter about her plight? No, she couldn't possibly be, he decided.

And then he changed his mind as he watched her out of narrowed eyes. Her nonchalance was too studied, too indifferent. She was overplaying the part that she was absolutely fearless, absolutely at ease.

World's Largest Telescope Seen Ready by 1940

Carnegie Physicist Tells of Progress of Work in Address Here.

Astronomers seeking new worlds to conquer through powerful glasses may look forward to the world's largest telescope being completed and ready for use in 1940, a Washington audience was told last night.

Sketching the progress made in designing and constructing the 200-inch instrument to be erected in California, Dr. John A. Anderson said:

"While it is difficult to predict accurately when the new observatory will be complete and ready for use, it is hoped that the telescope mounting will be installed and adjusted by 1939 and that the optical system, including the great mirror, may be finished some time in 1940."

The lecture by Dr. Anderson, physicist at Mount Wilson Observatory, was under auspices of the Carnegie Institution. He is executive officer of the group charged with carrying out the 200-inch telescope project.

Nine years after conception of plans for the powerful reflector, Dr. Anderson reported its status is as follows:

Mirror Grinding Started.

The laborious process of grinding, polishing, figuring and testing the mirror, cast in Corning, N. Y., and transported by special train to Pasadena, has been started.

It has been decided to coat the surface with aluminum, following a series of experiments, and a successful method of applying the metal has been developed.

Palomar Mountain, 93 miles southeast of Pasadena and 50 miles north of San Diego, has been chosen as the site for the instrument. Many locations were considered, influencing qualities being such visibility factors as slight temperature changes at night, freedom from fogs and low clouds, freedom from sky illuminations caused by city lights and low wind velocity.

Other considerations were water supply, good approaching highways and reasonable accessibility to the staffs of both the Mount Wilson Observatory of Carnegie Institution and California Institute of Technology, both at Pasadena. Their scientists will co-operate in use of the telescope.

Construction Under Way.

On the 600-acre Palomar reservation construction work is well under way, Dr. Anderson said. A 500,000-gallon elevated tank and a 1,000,000-gallon storage tank have been provided. Facilities for storage and distribution of oil and gas have been made and living quarters provided for astronomers.

Erection of the stationary part of the 200-inch dome is proceeding rapidly. The telescope mounting is being built in Philadelphia. The instrument and optical shops and the astrophysical laboratory have been erected on the California Institute campus.

A magazine article in 1927 by Dr. George E. Hale, honorary director of the Mount Wilson Observatory, contained the suggestion which led to development of the telescope, whose diameter will be twice the size of the largets one now in use at the West Coast "star station."

When it is completed, some four years hence, scientists the world over hope it will reveal to man's eye heavenly bodies millions of years distant and possibly answer such cosmic riddles as the "expanding universe" theory.

Modern Robin Hood Gets a 5-Year Term

Bacau, Rumania, Dec. 8 (AP).—Rumania's silver-tongued "Robin Hood," the celebrated Coroju, who practices banditry with a smile and frowns at bloodshed, was sentenced today to five years in prison.

Moreover, authorities are considering getting stone-deaf guards to keep Coroju behind the bars.

They are frankly nervous about his siren-like eloquence. For, the last time Coroju escaped—one of a long series—he not only walked out himself, but persuaded his guards to join him in a life of romantic outlawry.

Coroju restricts his raids to wealthy estate owners, like the English Robin Hood of Sherwood Forest, and similarly distributes his loot among the poor, he stoutly maintains.

Question of Site For Memorial Still Undecided

Although 9 of the 12 members, it has been learned, favor the Tidal Basin site in West Potomac Park for the Thomas Jefferson Memorial, opponents of that proposed location were assured last night that the question confronting the memorial commission is still an open one.

Reiterating his indorsement of the Mall's cross-axis for the monument, Senator Augustine Lonergan (Democrat), Connecticut, pointed out that final decisions on neither the location nor the design will be made before the group holds its next meeting about January 15.

Senators Lonergan and Charles L. McNary, Republican leader, favor the Mall, while Senator Elbert Thomas (Democrat), Utah, is known to be partial to a site in Anacostia.

All other commission members, including three Congressmen, three Presidential appointees, and three experts named by the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation, are reliably reported to be supporters of the Tidal Basin plan.

Should arguments at the January meeting end in a deadlock, President Roosevelt is expected to be asked to decide. Even if decisions are unanimous on the design or location, or both, the President's approval will be obtained before actual work is begun, it was said unofficially.

Meanwhile, agitation is being continued for a utilitarian memorial to the great statesman and educator. Influential private sources are contacting members of Congress and high ranking executives urging that the memorial be in the form of a health or educational center, rather than a mass of marble costing several million dollars.

Bonuses Slated For Employes Of 4 Concerns

W. & J. Sloane, Little Tavern Shops, Kaufman and Goldheims Act.

Employes of W. & J. Sloane, 711 Twelfth street northwest, will receive a Christmas bonus of 5 per cent of their annual salaries, to be distributed sometime prior to Christmas Day, it was announced yesterday.

The bonus applies to those employes who have been associated with the firm for six months or more.

Goldheim's men's furnishing store announced a Christmas bonus of one week's salary to all employes. The store, established in 1875, has given continual employment to all of its personnel even through the recent depression.

Following a custom established several years ago, the D. J. Kaufman stores will distribute Christmas bonuses of one week's salary, Joseph D. Kaufman, president and treasurer, announced yesterday.

This bonus also will be paid sometime before Christmas. The bonus is a semi-annual affair, employes receiving an extra week's salary at vacation time, in addition to their vacations with pay.

Christmas bonuses also will be distributed to 135 Washington and Baltimore employes of Little Tavern Shops, Inc., Harry F. Duncan, president, announced yesterday.

The presentation of checks will be made at a "bonus breakfast" Sunday at the Mayflower Hotel. A similar party will be held the following Sunday in Louisville, Ky., for the restaurant chain's employes in that city.

A total of $6,000 will be passed out in the three cities, Duncan said. The Washington and Baltimore tavern have 135 employes and there are 25 in Louisville. Headquarters of the three-city chain is at 5100 Georgia avenue.

Mrs. Schwartz, who came here from Philadelphia about five years ago, was a native of Berlin.

Surviving are two daughters by her first marriage, Miss Viola Wildermuth and Mrs. Laura W. Earle, and two grandchildren, all of Washington. She also leaves a sister, Mrs. Lena Slater, of Philadelphia.

'Right' Bus Takes 'Wrong' Route as Its Driver Forgets

It's even more interesting when the bus driver arises from his seat and says:

"Honest, folks, I'm sorry. I've been turning up Tenth street all day and I forgot that I was on the Chevy Chase run all this time."

It all came up last night during the rush hour when a passenger who had hailed a Chevy Chase bus on E street northwest rose to object when the bus turned north on Tenth street instead of Thirteenth street, as per tradition.

AAA Dismissals.

The first batch of Triple A dismissal notices definitely will be handed out December 15, although the exact number has not yet been decided upon. Another batch is expected January 1, the total for both dates to be around 800.

Between 130 and 140 of those dismissed will go through application of the marriage clause. Regular civil service procedure will be followed with the others. All persons dismissed will get two weeks notice and accrued leave; the 90-day furloughs do not start until the expiration of that leave period.

The AAA budget for next year has been cut and a further lay-off of about 400 employes will take place next spring. There is a fair likelihood that this latter group will have received civil service status before being let out. The proposal raised by WPA unionists at their recent mass meetings that emergency employes be given civil service status before they are dismissed to give them first crack at any new Government jobs, is being considered sympathetically by some AAA officials. They doubt, however, whether anything can be done in this respect without legislation.

The Resettlement ax seems to have been closeted—temporarily, at least. During November only 31 employes were dismissed here in Washington, bringing the local RA payroll down to 2,754.

On the Air.

Enthusiasm, never at a low pitch, is running particularly high these days over at the United States Office of Education's radio project. One reason is that tomorrow the first Nation-wide conference on educational broadcasting will open at the Mayflower under the joint auspices of the Office of Education and the Federal Communications Commission. Another reason is that the week-end mail brought in requests from Puerto Rico and Buenos Aires for copies of the project's scripts to be translated for use in those countries. (The scripts have already been done over in Portuguese and pretty soon the office may be forced to add to its scripts "all rights reserved including the Scandinavian.")

Never having listened to one of the project's radio broadcasts we can't tell you much about them, but as a frequent visitor on the premises we can say that the office has an atmosphere peculiarly its own. The offices are located in the rear of the Metropolitan Club and only minor alterations have been made. The rooms are still laid out more in club than office style, the carpetings are still on the floor, desk and floor lamps provide most of the light and the coppery bannister on the winding stair still quivers as if it would come off at a touch. The pounding of a typewriter, common to most Government offices, is missing—more than likely one is apt to hear a radio playing—and so the visitor isn't surprised to learn that every afternoon at 4:30 is tea-time for the staff.

Pride and joy of the staff are the stacks of mail that pour into the office daily. A thermometer chart has been tacked up on one side of the walls and it is is LeRoy Stillwagon's job to add the mercury as the mail swells. Changes are made every day and if Stillwagon overlooks his duties someone is certain to remind him to "take the daily temperature."

Yesterday's thermometer showed more than 88,000 letters since the program started last spring. Most popular, is the co-operative broadcast with the Smithsonian Institution, known as "The World Is Yours," which draws almost 3,000 letters a week. Then comes "Answer Me This" (you may recall that it made its debut by asking how many feet has a Caucasian). Then, "Have You Heard," a popularization of scientific odd-bits, "Education in the News," specially designed for teachers, and "Safety Musketeers" which aims at making the world safe for playing children.

Here's a little tale that was provoked by our story on Monday on the problems of statisticians though it would seem to have more point for newspaper composing rooms. The other day a WPA statistician was interpreting some new tables that had been drawn up in another division. Working through the tables our statistician discovered they ended rather abruptly and he notified the division where they originated accordingly.

Commissioner Hazen Intervenes at Behest of Mrs. Roosevelt and Overrules Department; Veteran of Washington Streets Happy Again.

A man who, at the age of 72, finds his whole life taken from him by a decision of the Police Department that Washington doesn't need organ grinders any more, should be mighty blue.

That man was Pietro Battaglioli, who for 20 years, had turned the crank of his mechanical organ on the streets of Washington and earned his living from the pennies, nickels and dimes of those who liked "Funiculi, Funicula," or I can't give you anything but love, baby."

But the story is that the Police Department is not the final arbiter in such cases. A friend of Pietro's last night admitted he wrote about his case to Mrs Franklin D Roosevelt. He found a friend in the wife of the President. Yesterday he was granted a license by Commissioner Melvin Hagen, who overruled the police.

So Pietro, in his advanced years, will again have a chance to grind out the tunes which were his living and his love. His organ is "recharged" with new music and with the old, which in his twenty years in Washington and many years before in London brought dimes and sixpence from those who thought a little music in the street was a good thing.

In commenting on the case, Commissioner Hazen said:

"Organ grinding is no crime. If people want to give the man something now and then, I don't think that constitutes solicitation of alms."

It was because of solicitation of alms charges that the Police Department said it could not renew the permit.

Volunteer Traffic Reformer Gets a Ticket.

On his way to a hearing in the District Building on several traffic tickets, Teunis F. Collier, self-appointed traffic violation observer, received a ticket for allegedly making an improper turn.

Collier, who lives at 3001 Dent place northwest, was driving at Eleventh and E streets northwest, when he was stopped by Policeman C. L. Smith of the Traffic Division. Smith said he charged Collier with turning left from a right lane.

After the incident, Capt. Milton D. Smith, in charge of the Traffic Division, refused to give reporters any information on the case. He said he knew nothing of the actions of his men "in regard to tickets."

When Collier received the ticket he was en route to the meeting of the Board of Trade sub-committee on law enforcement.

At this meeting he told committee members there would be no flouting of the law as long as he was about. He said he had reported traffic law violations to the police in the past and would do so in the future.

Rooms Available, Rep. Beiter Finds

This is simply another version of the Beiter being bitten, or what have you and how good a humor are you in.

At any rate, Representative Alfred F. Beiter, of Williamsville, N. Y., learned yesterday that there are apartments for rent in Washington despite his claim of "acute shortage."

Yesterday he began work on a bill for a Government-owned apartment house to accommodate members of Congress, asserting apartments were too few and rents too high in the District.

And only a few hours later telephone bells began to jangle incessantly in his office as persons wishing to rent him a place to live called.

Woman Ends Life By Gas in Kitchen

Leaving a note in which she requested that her body be cremated and her ashes be strewn on the Potomac River, Mrs. Nellie Marie White, 45, of 616 A street northeast, committed suicide by inhaling gas late yesterday.

Mrs. White, wife of Arthur White, a salesman for an automobile concern, was found dead after police had forced the door of her kitchen, where she had locked herself. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

Child on Way To Mass Dies Beneath Bus

On his way to attend mass at St. Aloysius Church, 6-year-old James Tate, of 60 New York avenue northeast, was killed instantly when crushed under the wheels of a Greyhound bus in front of his home.

Jimmie left his home with his brother Joseph, 9, to celebrate the Feast of the Immaculate Conception. Joseph was walking ahead of his brother and did not hear the screech of the brakes and did not suspect James had been injured. He continued on to an uncle's house.

Neighbors told police the bus ran over Jimmie's head. He was carried into his home by Nicholas Crefilli, of 7 New York avenue, and pronounced dead upon arrival of a doctor.

Inquest Today.

Police said Everett K. Van Deusen, 40, of Brentwood, Md., was the driver of the bus, which was bound for Pittsburgh. Van Deusen will appear at a coroner's inquest at the District Morgue today.

Jimmie's death, the ninth traffic fatality during the last week, raised the District's toll to 90 for this year.

John O. Schuckers, 65, of 60 M street northwest, was seriously injured when he was struck by a coal truck while boarding a street car at New Jersey and New York avenues northwest. He was taken to Sibley Hospital and treated for a possible fractured skull and internal injuries.

The truck, which police said was owned by the Marlow Coal Co., failed to stop. A lookout was sent for the driver.

Shoemaker to Appear.

Another inquest is scheduled for today when a coroner's jury will probe the death Monday night of Mrs. Lida M. Gridley, 55, wife of Leonard C. Gridley, a Treasury Department accountant.

James R. Shoemaker, 18, of 1507 Rosedale street northwest, driver of the car that struck Mrs. Gridley, was released under $500 bond and will appear at the hearing.

Meanwhile, a coroner's jury held one motorist for Police Court action under the negligent homicide act and exonerated another yesterday after inquests into the death of George Ward, 70, of West Swanzey, N. H., and Dr. Oliver L. Fassig, 76, retired meteorologist, who lived at the Cosmos Club.

Joseph N. Brenner, 39, of 738 Quincy street northwest, driver of the automobile that killed Mr. Ward, was held. Witnesses testified, however, that Ward was crossing North Capitol street at U street against a green light when he was struck Saturday night.

Horton Exonerated.

The jury exonerated George H. Horton, 55, of 1301 Fifteenth street northwest, in connection with the death of Dr. Fassig, who died in Emergency Hospital Sunday night from injuries received November 20.

Witnesses said the aged scientist ran across Connecticut avenue into the path of Horton's car.

One motorist had his permit revoked and 13 others were suspended by the Revocation Board yesterday.

Thirty-day suspensions—Frederick W. Hill, Cabin John, Md., 45 miles; David L. Morris, 2844 Wisconsin avenue northwest, 45 miles; Louis D. Mortillaro, Massapequa, N. Y., 45 miles; Glenn E. Pierson, 1229 B street northeast, 50 miles; George L. Petta, Baltimore, Md., 48 miles; William A. Ryan, Landover, Md., 50 miles.

Fifteen-day suspensions—Herman Martin, Howlett, Va., 36 miles; James D. Moore, Upper Darby, Pa., 40 miles; Joseph I. Pinkney, Forestville, Md., 38 miles; Elwin J. Sampson, Alexandria, Va., 40 miles; Fred C. Taylor, Silver Spring, Md., 40 miles; James W. Taylor, Chevy Chase, Md., 36 miles; Marion C. Windley, Rockville, Md., 38 miles.

Greyhound Trophy Is Won By D. C. Route

Pennsylvania Unit Takes Safety Honor; Driver Gets Button.

The Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, of which the Washington-Richmond region is a member, last night was awarded the annual safety trophy of the Greyhound Bus Co. for making the best record of any of their 21 divisions.

More than 60 drivers, keen-eyed, alert men who take the big buses through in all kinds of weather, gathered at the Lee House to hear the announcement of the award, made by Marcus Dow, Greyhound manager of safety and personnel.

Drivers in the Washington-Richmond region, Dow said, had driven a total of 155,000 miles per accident. By accident, he added, the Greyhound Co. meant even a scratched fender.

Heading the list was Robert A. Nunn, a driver who received a gold and diamond safety button for having driven five years without having even scratched a fender. That five years of driving represented more than 250,000 miles through snow and sleet, rain and fog, taking his bus through on schedule.

The silver safety trophy, won by the Pennsylvania lines for the second time, was accepted from Dow by L. C. Major, regional manager of the Pennsylvania Greyhound lines.

Judge Robert E. Mattingly, of the District Municipal Court, congratulated the drivers on their record. S. R. Sundstrom, president of the Pennsylvania Greyhound lines, also spoke briefly.

Among those present were Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, Riley Elgin and Richmond B. Keech, of the District Public Utilities Commission; Inspector L. I. Edwards, of the Police Department, and Capt. Milton Smith, of the Traffic Bureau.

Storm Signals Posted Along Eastern Coast

Inauguration Post Studied By Grayson

Red Cross Work, Health May Prevent Admiral From Accepting.

Returns From Meet of Relief Unit Societies Held in Paris.

Back after a quick trip to Europe, in better health than he has enjoyed for some time, Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson yesterday debated acceptance of the chairmanship of President Roosevelt's inaugural committee as he prepared for today's meeting of the board of incorporators and chapter delegates of the American Red Cross.

As chairman of the American Red Cross, Admiral Grayson went to Paris three weeks ago to attend a meeting of the League of Red Cross Societies, an organization for coordinating activities of Red Cross societies in 62 countries, which he also headed.

Grayson, who headed the 1933 inaugural committee, is known to be President Roosevelt's only candidate for the post this year. The question of the admiral's health and the pressure of duties in connection with his Red Cross chairmanship are understood at the White House to be delaying his acceptance.

Admiral Grayson reported himself in "improved" health as he returned to his desk yesterday. He suffered from an arthritic condition for a time last summer.

Meanwhile, it was learned at the White House that Pennsylvania avenue has been selected tentatively for the inaugural parade, January 20. The decision lay between the historic route and Constitution avenue.

Before leaving the White House for the trip to Buenos Aires, President Roosevelt repeated his preference for simple inaugural rites. He has vetoed plans for a ball and the parade from the Capitol to the White House is expected to consist almost entirely of military roganizations.

Nevertehless, preparation for even a simple inaugural entails a large amount of work, and the time is felt in many quarters to be alrmingly brief. Delay in the appointment of a chairman is holding up selection of committees and subcommittees, among which proparatory tasks will be divided.

Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes will preside at the Red Cross gathering today when members of the central committee, governing body of the organization, will be elected and vacancies filled in the board of incorporators.

Three-year terms of former Gov. Alfred E. Smith, of New York, and George E. Scott, of Chicago, have expired. In addition the incorporators lost through death Senator James Couzens, of Detroit; Charles C. Glover, of Washington; Col. J. Franklin McFadden, of Philadelphia; former Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland, and John Storer, of Boston, and by resignation, Mrs. Leonard Elmhirst, of New York.

Citizens' Group Against Change In Gasoline Tax

Randle Highlands Unit Takes Stand Opposing Fund Diversions.

The Randle Highlands Citizens Association last night, adopted a resolution opposing any increase in gasoline taxes or any diversion of those taxes into anything but the upkeep of public highways, the purpose for which they were intended.

The motion was unanimously adopted after a member of the association presented a study of gasoline tax reports prepared by a local automobile association.

The association also adopted a resolution to change its boundaries after completion of a report from a neighboring group, the Randle Highlands Citizens Association, which was formed last year and in some sections overlaps the Randle Highlands boundaries.

The group was presented a silver trophy for winning the softball tournament at the Anacostia fieldday, held recently. The trophy was received from the Anacotia Citizens Association by W. Stansbury of the Randle group.

A resolution opposing any rezoning in connection with the proposed erection of Benning Abattoir was adopted by the Burleith Citizens Association, in session last night.

The group announced plans to distribute gifts and food to the needy this Christmas, and to urge all citizens of the community to contribute. Geoffrey Creyke, jr., was named chairman of this committee.

Committee chairmen named last night included: Norman W. Fields, membership; Mrs. H. Parkinson, law and legislation; Richard W. Thrush, schools and playgrounds; W. B. Whipple, traffic and community development and management; L. C. Schilder, fire and police, and Mrs. R. B. Horsfall, parks and gardens.

Banks to Pay $1,750,000 Holiday Fund

Three Closed Institutions Announce Pay-Off to Depositors.

District and Franklin National, Northeast Savings on List.

Three closed banks today will pour approximately $1,750,000 into the pre-Christmas holiday trade here, the Treasury Department announced yesterday.

Dividends from the District National Bank and the Northeast Savings Bank will total approximately $150,000, while another $250,000 will be distributed by the Franklin National Bank.

Checks for depositors in the District National Bank will be available at the old bank location, 1406 G street northwest, and those for the Northeast Bank depositors will be distributed at the branch office of the Hamilton National Bank, at Eighth and H streets northeast. Payments will be made only to depositors who have received certificates of notification.

With today's 25 per cent dividend, 17,000 District National Bank depositors will have been paid 75 per cent of their deposits. The 2,000 depositors of the Northeast Bank with today's dividend will have been paid 95 per cent of the amount due them. The current dividend will bring the amount received by Franklin depositors up to 82.5 of their original deposits.

Receiver Justus Wardell of the District and Northeast Banks said it will require approximately ten days to distribute all of the checks.

Mutterings.

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 9.

What fun to congratulate all the proud star-mamas with their offspring, then say to pompous Cecil B. DeMille, "You pick the best baby!" (Teachers always did call me "trouble-maker.") Frantic urge: To shake Irene Dunne until she gets some life into her. Growl. How many stars who bleat about big taxes would swap places with the fellow who does not earn enough to pay a tax? Ambition. To play two-handed "Post Office" with June Lang.

NIESSEN.

What would you call Gertrude Neison, born of Russian and Swedish parents, aboard a Norwegian steamer en route to America?

Imaginable hilarious evening: Listening to the mamas of Jane Withers and Shirley Temple (stars on the same lot!) debate the relative merits of their respective children. Wondering muse: Will Charlie Chaplin ever fulfill his die-hard ambition to portry Napoleon? Diabolic thought: To slip garlic into Robert Taylor's cereal the morning he is to enact love scenes with Greta Garbo.

It seems we have sun worshippers in Hollywood. Two of them are Basil Rathbone and Director W. S. Van Dyke. There are others, but these two are ardent. Each afternon Basil ceases whatever he may be doing to watch the sun nudge its way into the hammock of the West. I have known him to interrupt involved movie scenes for this purpose.

Van Dyke thrills to sunrises, and has seen them from every nook and corner of the world. No matter where he is, nor at what hour he retired the night before, "Woody" rises between 4 and 6 to watch the sun open up for the day's business.

Quite contrary to the sun worshippers are such as Greta Garbo, who likes to walk in the rain. And Tom Brown, who enjoys long rides in heavy fogs, the windows of his car flung open. Adolphe Menjou is another rain lover, but due to his protracted illness, physicians ordered him to forego such diversion.

Came upon Ned Sparks sunning himself on the veranda of the Masquers Club, and asked, "What are you doing here?" "Just waiting around," he croaked, "for my arteries to harden."

Napoleon Letters Sold For $8,835 at Auction

London, Deoc. 8 (AP).—A collection of letters written by Napoleon and his second wife, the Empress Marie Louise, were sold at public auction today for $8,835.

The Egyptian Legation bought most of the missives, many of which describe details of Napoleon's Egyption campaign of 1798 to 1801. They were gathered by Emile Brouwet, a French collector.

"Banjo on My Knee" Is Saga of the Shanty Boats; Marsha Hunt Booked for Busy Day Here Tomorrow

Twentieth Century-Fox Release Combines Many Divergent Elements, But Comes Out Right Side Up; Young Movie Player, Here to Visit Relatives, Pressed Into Service on Behalf of Adolph Zukor; More Notes on "The Show Is On," at National.

"BANJO ON MY KNEE," unspooled for the ladies and gentlemen of the local critical fraternity—with just one dash of sorority in it—in the private projection room of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange yesterday afternoon, reveals a story that is as spotty as the muddy Mississippi River that forms its turgid background, but still manages to pack an emotional wallop that quite outweighs any of its minor deficiencies.

BELL.

The story is a simple one of the shanty boat people who live their lives on the water and hold in mild contempt the river people who marry "land girls." The opening sequences of the musico-melodrama concern themselves with the marriage of Ernie Holley, scion of generations of river folks, being married to Pearl, a former "hired girl" from inland. This is the genesis of the picture's conflict of types, viewpoints and loves. What the ramifications of the plot disclose will be divulged in this space on Saturday morning after the film has had its local premiere on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater.

It is not too early at this time, however, to make known that there are certain aspects of this production that place upon it the stamp of momentary greatness—just as there are others that reduce it to a tawdriness that the sum total of its effectiveness does not deserve. The closing episodes of the play are the ones with which I have a definite quarrel. They become distinctly and frankly maudlin and so melodramatic, in the storm on the river scenes, as to be slightly grotesque. But underlying all this is a genuine stratum of heart interest, homely human nature and novel comedy treatment that marks "Banjo on My Knee" up on the right side of the critical ledger.

Among other things, the film permits Barbara Stanwyck to do one of the most effective bits of work she has contributed to the screen in many months. There is never a juncture in the development of this subject when Miss Stanwyck struck a false note, so far as I could see. Joel McCrea is not quite so fortunate in the character of his role, as Ernie Holley, since the part is a decidedly unsympathetic one that throws the complete weight of public approbation to Miss Stanwyck.

If the picture were notable for no other reason, it would be memorable for the fine opportunity it affords Walter Brennan, in the role of Newt Holley, patriarch of the mud flats, who has ambitions in the matter of a grandchild. Brennan, more and more, is establishing himself as one of the cinema's outstanding character actors, for whom no chore seems too difficult or too complex.

Not the least distinguished of "Banjo on My Knee's" claims to eminence lies in the superlatively excellent interpretation of Handy's "St. Louis Blues," by the Hall Johnson Choir, famous for its work in "The Green Pastures," on both the stage and the screen. This comparatively brief interval in the current item is richly reminiscent of scenes on Catfish Walk in Gershwin's folk opera of "Porgy and Bess," seen on the National stage last season.

"Banjo on My Knee" is a picture in which the virtues so far outweigh the faults that I am sure any discriminating theatergoer will wish to see it when it opens on a local screen.

Afterthoughts on "The Show Is On," at the National, which was hurriedly and sketchily reviewed in a rushed midnight half-hour for yesterday's paper, would include the observation that among the things this department liked best were everything done by Reginald Gardiner, whose participation in the revue was only fragmentarily recorded; at least four of Gracie Barrie's six songs; all of Mitzi Mayfair's dances; the helpful activities of Ralph Riggs, the dancing Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in "As Thousands Cheer;" the valuable assistance of Jerrie Koban, Mildred Webb and Evelyn Thawl in the Paul Haakon ballets; William Herrschaft's ventriloquial figure in Gracie's "Ventriloquist" and, of course, everything done by Beatrice Lillie and Bert Lahr. The Continentals and the side-proscenium loudspeaker also come in for a bit of praise in any comprehensive resume of the manifold merits of the best revue the National Capital has enjoyed in a season or two.

Comes a postaltelegraph from Harry Hunter, Washington branch exchange manager for Paramount Pictures, reading as follows: "You are cordially invited to attend luncheon we are giving for Marsha Hunt at Carlton Hotel Thursday, December tenth at 1 o'clock. Miss Hunt is here in interest of Adolph Zukor's silver jubilee. Hope to see you there." I hesitate to discourage Mr. Hunter, but I shall be there, the gods and the composing room being propitious.

Miss Hunt, by the way, like practically all visiting screen notables, will find herself confronted with a hectic day, come tomorrow.

She is scheduled to arrive aboard an American Airlines plane at 10.30 a. m. From the airport, where she will be greeted by a distinguished corteries of Loew, Paramount and District dignitaries, she will be whisked to the Carlton for interviews with the press. At 1 o'clock, as already recorded, she will be guest at that luncheon. A broadcast direct from the hotel is scheduled for the early afternoon and later a visit to the White House is planned.

Miss Hunt will make two personal appearances on the stage of Loew's Capitol before her day is over—one in the afternoon and one at night. In this connection it is interesting to note that Miss Hunt recently completed work as one of the principals in "College Holidays," in which other important roles are taken by Jack Benny, Burns and Allen, Mary Boland and Martha Raye. This will be coming along soon to a local screen.

She also was included among the four young actresses in Hollywood selected by beauty experts as having the most beautiful legs on the screen, the others being Rosalind Marquis, recently here with the "Golddiggers of 1937" golden plane expedition; Simone Simon and Dorothy Lemour. (What! No June Lang?)

While in Washington, Miss Hunt will be guest of her grandmother a part of the time, in whose home her father also is visiting.

Owing to the extreme length of the performance of the Shuberts' production of "The Show Is On," currently at the National, announcement is made by both the house and company managements that beginning tonight the evening curtain will rise promptly at 8:15 o'clock; matinee curtains today and Saturday will be at 2:15. The routine of the revue, incidentally, was completely altered last night, although no deletions of importance were made. The first act by this device was shortened almost 15 minutes and the second thrown into better balance.

MRS. ELY CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

Interference Bidding.

The eternal struggle for "top scores" at duplicate contract tends to distort the bidding. The fact that a slam in notrump counts a few points more than slams in suits influences many players to sacrifice the greater safety of the suit to the larger potential score of notrump. That accounts for the contract in today's hand. South was playing in a duplicate match with a partner who did not play the cards very well, and he maneuvered to become declarer and, at the same time, to stave off a certain opening lead.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ Q 8 5 4 ♡ K J 10 4 ◇ A K J ♣ J 2
♠ 10 7 6 3 2 ♡ 8 5 ◇ 6 5 2 ♣ 8 5 3	North West East South	♠ K J ♡ Q 9 6 3 2 ◇ 8 7 ♣ K 10 9 6
	♠ A 9 ♡ A 7 ◇ Q 10 9 4 3 ♣ A Q 7 4

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 N T	Pass
5 ◇	Pass	6 N T	Pass
Pass	Pass

Although South's bidding was much too fancy, from point of view of values, he really did not overbid. Strangely enough, North, though he bid conventionally, did overbid—his double spade raise was too strong; two spades would have reflected his values more accurately.

West decided that the safest opening was through the unsupported heart suit. Dummy played the ten, which held when East properly refused to cover. The deuce of clubs was led and the Queen finessed. The heart Ace followed, then a diamond to the King, after which the heart King was cashed, declarer discardlowed, and East's discards on the last three were highly unimaginative. He held on to the King-Jack of spades and the King-ten of clubs. The Ace and another club now threw him on lead and forced him to lead a spade into the North-South combined tenace.

Slight imagination on East's part would have warned that this throw-in play was coming. East was, of course, forced to keep the King-Jack of spades, but he should have discarded his clubs rather than court such an end-play. Had he done so, the eight of clubs in West's hand would have saved the day for the defenders, as West instead of East would have taken the lead and the spade would have gone through dummy's Queen instead of up to it.

Vibration the Open Sesame to Screen Success

Famous Film Music Man Can Spot Stars Over Phone, He Says.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Dec. 8.—Call up Herbert Stothart some time and the stocky, sandy-haired film music manufacutrer will tell you whether you have the makings of a movie actor—he says.

If so, Stothart is in position to out-genius all previous starpicking geniuses doing business in Hollywood.

Even Samuel Goldwyn and Adolph Zukor admit they have to meet raw acting ivory eye to eye and sample it with extensive screen tests before estimating possibilities.

"There's no secret about my system," explained the music man. "After all, vocal personality and charm are just matters of vibration. The test for a screen voice is whether it can make the hearer vibrate back.

"If I don't vibrate when you call me on the telephone, you might as well hang up and try some other business."

"I said to myself immediately, 'there is a charming girl who should go far in pictures.' I was judging entirely by her telephone voice, and our later meeting proved me exactly correct."

Similarly, Stothart said, he vibrated to voices of Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow, Elissa Landi, Virginia Bruce, Eleanor Powell and others, all of whom have borne out his good opinion.

The telephone method of picking stars isn't likely to supplant screen tests, however, because of an obvious limitation.

For example, Stothart is enthusiastic about the voice of Joan Crawford, which he says has the "quality of a cello," and just couldn't miss on the screen.

Dog, which has been taught to sit up and beg for his food, wandered away from home and turned up on the Astor front porch. Meeting Mary the hound sat up and begged his prettiest, so entrancing her she dashed back into the house and prepared him some dinner.

The Astor diet for dogs: Double portion of scrambled eggs and bacon, garnished with parsley. How does that vibrate?

The Washington Post

* XX WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1936 23

This Morning . . .

New York, Dec. 8.

I am not familiar with the insanity rate among big league club owners, but if their business does not contain all the elements of a short cut to the asylum—well, I'm Napoleon.

Here is Tom Yawkey, owner of the Boston Red Sox, actually offering a couple of ball players who cost him $50,000 and $20,000 addition in cash for—of all people—Julius Solters.

POVICH.

That might be an utterly sane idea if spawned by any other club owner except Mr. Yawkey, because Mr. Solters is a very highly rated ball player, but because the offer was made by Mr. Yawkey, it looks to be a very screwy idea, indeed, for no longer than two years ago Mr. Yawkey owned title to Mr. Solters with no questions asked.

But willy nilly, Mr. Yawkey wants Mr. Solters back from the St. Louis Browns, even if it costs him $90,000 to swing the deal for the same guy he bought from Baltimore a few seasons ago for $20,000.

Today, at the major league player-trading session, Mr. Yawkey was stalking Manager Rogers Hornsby, of the Browns, in the hotel lobbies all afternoon in an attempt to persuade Mr. Hornsby to take Catcher Rick Ferrell, Pitcher Fred Ostermueller and $20,000 more of his money and give him back Mr. Solters.

Mr. Yawkey is young in the baseball business but he is being given a thorough course in the screwy economics of the game. And he is still in there learning it the hard way, what with his having spent $4,000,000 to develop his Red Sox into a fifth-place team.

He was going at this baseball business right, Mr. Yawkey figured, when he surrounded himself with the best baseball brains available to manage his interests. In Eddie Collins, his general manager, he hired a man who had been 30 years in the game, whose eye for talent was undisputed and who would be the watch dog of the club's treasury.

So, in 1934, when Mr. Collins recommended that Mr. Yawkey buy the hard-hitting Solters from Baltimore for $20,000, why, Mr. Yawkey bought him.

And when, the next season, Mr. Collins deduced that the Red Sox needed a good second baseman more than they needed Julius Solters, why, Mr. Yawkey signed a check for $20,000 and sent it along with Solters to the St. Louis Browns for Oscar Melillo.

In the meantime, Mr. Collins with Mr. Yawkey's permission paid out $25,000 to the Browns for Catcher Rick Ferrell and $25,000 to the Rochester club for Pitcher Fred Ostermueller. Yawkey signed the checks as cheerfully as Collins promised him the pennant.

And now, it seems, the Red Sox need a hard-hitting right-handed outfielder. With no more compunctions, seemingly, than he would have in asking whether Mr. Yawkey would like one or two lumps in his coffee, Mr. Collins suggested that Mr. Yawkey buy Solters back from the Browns. The price? Rick Ferrell, Ostermueller and, $20,000 more of Mr. Yawkey's cash. And Mr. Yawkey apparently thinks that's a swell idea. Personally, I have another name for it.

Lobbying.

With Connie Mack cooling toward the Red Sox's proposed deal for Bill Werber that would bring Third Baseman Higgins to Boston, the Sox upped their offer . . . They now are willing to send Infielder John Kroner to the Athletics in addition . . . Owner Joe Cambria, of Albany, reports that his deal to sign Babe Ruth as manager is off . . . Mrs. Ruth says it's the big leagues or nothing for the Babe . . . Owner Tom Yawkey, of the Red Sox, advised that his team had signed Catcher Peacock, a free agent, for $15,000, inquired casually, "Whoinell is Peacock?" . . . There are 2,000 roomers in the hotel that is baseball headquarters . . . And 2,000,000 rumors . . . Earl Mack, who took a team of big leaguers barnstorming at the end of the season, reports that Monte Weaver gained 7 pounds on the ten-day trip . . . A movement started by Eddie Collins to reinstate the spitball among the legitimate deliveries in the big leagues is indorsed by Managers Joe Cronin, Bucky Harris, Jimmy Dykes and Mickey Cochrane . . . Heinie Manush, seen in earnest conversation with Manager Dykes, of the White Sox, wants a job in the Chicago outfield . . . The Washington forces who have now been in attendance at two trading sessions have signed no players but lost a manager . . . Bert Niehoff, manager of Washington's Chattanooga farm, resigned to accept a managerial job with Louisville at a $500 increase in salary.

Raftery, Hess Quit as V.M.I. Coaches

Head Football Mentor, Aid Resign Due to Alumni Feeling.

Raftery Had Been at Post for 15 Years; This Season Best.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Lexington, Va., Dec. 8.—William C. (Bill) Raftery, head coach of football at Virginia Military Institue for the last decade, and associated with the school in a coaching capacity for the last 15 years, resigned tonight at a meeting of the athletic council.

His resignation, together with that of Ed Hess, line coach, was accepted with regrets by the council, which immediately appointed a committee of four to name Raftery's successor. Col. James A. Anderson, faculty chairman of athletics; Col. William Couper, of the faculty committee; O. H. Beasly, alumni member of Roanoke, Va., and Cadet James C. Farley, captain of the 1936 team and cadet representative, were named on this committee, which will report back to the council at a later date.

In giving up the position he has held since 1927, when he succeeded Maj. B. B. Clarkson, now director of athletics, Raftery said the prevailing feeling among alumni of the need for a change in coaches prompted his action. He stepped aside to give the council a free hand in the matter. The season just closed was one of the best in recent years, the team winning 6 of 10 games, including a surprise victory over Maryland, and finishing fourth in the Southern Conference.

Dogged by Ill Luck.

Raftery usually was handicapped by a paucity in previous years, but the 1936 material was conceded to be of highest quality. Even then ill luck dogged his steps and many of his best players were not available throughout the season because of injuries.

Raftery first came to V. M. I. 15 years ago as backfield coach and assistant to Clarkson. With his elevation to the head coaching role he also assumed the basketball and baseball coaching tasks. He signed Hess as assistant in 1927.

Maj. Clarkson was appointed a committee of one to appoint a basketball coach for the approaching season, and the baseball duties will be assigned to Jack Alexander and Harry Montgomery, assistant coaches under Raftery.

The committee tonight had no candidates in mind for the football position and indicated that it would proceed slowly, carefully considering any applications for it.

Raftery has no immediate plans, but probably will seek a coaching berth elsewhere.

Dean's Golf Open Is Getting Costly

Bradenton, Fla., Dec. 8 (AP).—Dizzy Dean is running up his telephone bill inviting baseball players wintering in Florida to his golf tournament Saturday.

The St. Louis Cardinal pitcher, cooperating with civic leaders in staging the Dizzy Dean Tournament, will present $50 to the golf professional with the lowest medal score and a prize of equal value to the low amateur.

Major and minor league baseball players who have accepted invitations include Johnny Moore, Eddie Moore, Paul Waner, Lloyd Waner, Paul Derringer, Heinie Manush, Elden Auker, Tommy Bridges, George Earnshaw, Watson Clark, Jack Russell, Lloyd Brown, Roy Spencer, Adam Comorosky, Bill Swift, Johnny Conney, Garland Braxton and Butch Henline.

Al Nelson, of Hopewell, N. J., and E. W. Harbert, of Battle Creek, Mich., golf professionals, will play, as will Billy Debeck and Frank Willard, cartoonists.

Miss. State Is Orange Bowl Selection

Will Play Duquesne for Title Held by Catholic University.

By the United Press.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 8.—Mississippi State and Duquesne—both of whom have acquired notable gridiron records despite two defeats—clash here on New Year's Day in the third annual Orange Bowl game. They will play for the title won last year by Catholic University of Washington.

Announcement of the Delta team's acceptance was made today by W. Keith Phillips, chairman of the bowl committee. The contest will be played in Miami Stadium, which has a seating capacity of 15,000.

Mississippi State's season record includes triumphs over Millsaps by 20 to 0; Howard, 35 to 0; Loyola, 32 to 0; Sewanee, 68 to 0; Mississippi, 26 to 6; Mercer, 32 to 0, and Florida, 7 to 0.

The Maroons were defeated 12 to 0 by Louisiana State, Southern representative in the Sugar Bowl, and by Alabama, 7 to 0. They tied Texas Christian, 0 to 0.

Cotton Bowl Tilt Off.

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 8 (U.P.).—Plans for a Cotton Bowl game here were canceled today after Mississippi State accepted an invitation to play in Miami's Orange Bowl.

Mississippi State officials telephoned P. A. McPhillips, Cotton Bowl committee chairman, asking release from a tentative agreement to play here.

McPhillips granted the release. Both Arkansas and Alabama universities had declined invitations to play the Mississippians here and the Cotton Bowl officials had been dickering with Texas Christian University.

Dixie Howell Bought.

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 8 (AP).—President Thomas R. Watkins, of the Memphis Southern Association Baseball Club, announced today the purchase of Millard (Dixie) Howell from Toledo of the American Association. The former Alabama University athlete plays either infield or outfield.

All-Sports Banquet To Draw 500 Tonight

By John R. Vosburgh.

Brimful of entertainment fit for a king—and Mrs. Simpson—the big-time all-sports banquet of the Touchdown Club takes over the main ballroom of the Willard Hotel tonight in lavish style. A complete sell-out of 500 tickets was announced last night, promising to pack the huge banquet hall to capacity.

When the whistle for the kick-off course is sounded by President Johnny McGovern, the former Minnesota All-American quarterback, at 8:30 p. m., it will mark the start of the most elaborate social function ever staged here by the sporting world.

A coast-to-coast network of the National Broadcasting Co. is to broadcast the words of the two speakers of the evening, Jimmy Crowley, Fordham's football coach, and United States Senator Pat McCarran, of Nevada, at 10:30 p. m. Crowley, whose feats for Notre Dame as a member of Rockne's famous Four Horsemen are still fresh in the minds of most sports followers, will treat the banqueters to his mastery of the after-dinner story.

Prize Banquet Speaker.

The coach of the Rams strengthened his standing as a banquet narrator last year by winning the prize awarded to the most effective story teller among football men and has proved his right to the honor on numerous occasions since. He has promised to bring out a bigger and better assortment or remarks tonight.

Senator McCarran draws his experiences from a lengthy background, including a sports career in the early part of the century. Whereas Crowley represents the first ranks of the sporting fraternity, the Nevada Senator gives public life an adequate representative.

Speech-making, however, with the exception of Sleepy Jim and the Senator, is definitely "out" tonight, thanks to the far-thinking banquet committee, and the only slumber-producing agencies on hand will be the bill of fare.

Rating high on the list of gala entertainers is Pathe News, with its movies of the best plays of 15 outstanding games of the season, concluding with a reel on the Pathe All-America team. Including numerous slow-motion shots, pictures of the following games will be put on the screen:

Yale-Cornell, Pitt-Ohio State, Minnesota-Nebraska, Fordham-Southern Methodist, Penn-Princeton, Northwestern-Ohio State, Army-Harvard, Duke-Georgia Tech, Pitt-Notre Dame, Dartmouth-Yale, Penn-Michigan, Yale-Princeton, Notre Dame-Army, Yale-Harvard and Army-Navy. Jock Connolly, of Pathe, and Sidney Lust are in charge of the movies.

Rules Explained At Court Clinic

The largest crowd of the meeting attended the second session of the National Capital Basketball Clinic last night at the Central Y. M. C. A. Close to 180 persons appeared to hear Paul Menton, sportswriter, veteran official and member of the national rules committee, give the rules a thorough going over. Among those present was Elmer Ripley, former coach at Yale.

Menton explained the new rules, which include four time-outs instead of three; permission for substitutes to talk with teammates on being sent in games, 6-foot restraining circle about the center jump place.

A novel contest was held to discover the finest free-throw expert in local schools or colleges and it turned out to be Hugo Schulze of Western High, who shot 23 out of 30 tries. In a shoot-off with Joe Brennan of George Washington, who looped 20 freeshots in 25 tries, Schulze trailed by one basket.

Austin, Tex., Dec. 8 (U.P.).—Dana X. Bible, present coach of the Nebraska Cornhuskers, will be invited to come to the University of Texas as head football coach at a salary of $12,000 a year, it was learned here tonight. He will succeed Jack Chevigny, former Notre Dame star, who has been coach at Texas for the past three years.

Lincoln, Nebr., Dec. 8—Dana Bible intimated tonight that he would not accept an offer which the University of Texas reportedly will make him.

"We are happily situated at Nebraska and if the people will bear with us I just have a feeling our address will be Lincoln, Nebr., for some time to come," he said.

They Used to Laugh as Guldahl Stepped Up to Putt, but Not Now

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 8.—They don't laugh any more when Ralph Guldahl, golf's biggest comeback man for 1936, steps up to putt.

There can't be much snikering at a putter that has been the indispensable instrument in blowing up a bankroll, definitely minus last June, as plump as a Christmas goose, and winning the Radix trophy for low average scoring honors. The husky, solemn Guldahl gave the goose its biggest meal yesterday, $2,500 for victory in the Miami Biltmore Open, leaving it stuffed with $7,561.66.

His winning 283 in the Miami Biltmore tournament gave him an average of 71.65 strokes per 18 holes in 65 rounds of formal competition, and possession of the Radix trophy after a great tussle with "Lighthorse" Harry Cooper, of Chicago. Coope finished the year with an average of 71.85 strokes in 82 rounds.

His Putting Beat Him.

When Guldahl showed up at Davenport, Iowa, last June for the Western Open tournament, after almost two years of obscurity, he was immediately recognized as the guy who had blown a four-foot putt on the final green of the 1933 National Open at Chicago's North Shore Club—a heart-breaking failure that gave Johnny Goodman the title by one stroke.

The missed putt that cost the fluffy haired Norwegian a tie and another chance in a playoff, really shouldn't have made any difference. All through the tournament he had been building up a reputation as a sour putter, missing enough ordinary ones along the route to have won handily had he dropped even a fair share of them.

At Davenport, Guldahl's putting was different enough to keep him close to Ray Mangrum and MacDonald Smith through the first 54 holes. On the final 18, his work on the greens was positively terrific. He was so hot that he finished with a blazing 64, for a 72 hole total of 274 and the $500 first prize.

On the Upswing.

Things started breaking badly for Guldahl about a year after the North Shore incident. He drifted to Los Angeles, where he worked at a fee course and tried selling automobiles on the side. Feeding and clothing Mr. and Mrs. Guldahl and the baby gave his income a terrific beating.

He decided to give the golf money circuit one more whirl, starting with the Western Open, and was away on his comeback. The pro northwest tour brought him a profit, but he has given the bankroll its biggest boosts during the past two weeks. He was ineligible for the P. G. A. championship tournament at Pinehurst, N. C., but picked up the trail again at the Augusta, Ga., Open. He won the victor's $1,000 at Augusta, and followed up with his $2,500 effort at Coral Gables.

Griffith Hopes to Get Auker, Wade and Fox For Newsom Today

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

New York, Dec. 8.—Earl Whitehill, temperamental southpaw veteran of the Washington pitching staff, late tonight was traded to the Cleveland Indians in a three-cornered deal.

The three phases of the deal are:

1. The Chicago White Sox send Rookie Pitcher Jack Salveson to Washington.
2. The Cleveland Indians send Pitcher Thornton Lee to Chicago.
3. The Washington club sends Pitcher Whitehill to Cleveland.

Thus the Nats, White Sox and Indians broke the dullness which has marked the major league trading sessions for three days by their announcement of the first deal of the meeting.

The trade, which had been brewing since the sessions started, had been balked by the early refusal of Manager Jimmy Dykes of the White Sox to concur, but his approval was finally given shortly before midnight.

Accent on Youth.

The accent-on-youth motif which Owner Clark Griffith and Manager Bucky Harris brought to the trading mart actuated Washington's agreement to the trade.

Salveson, the new member of the Nats, compiled an impressive record of 21 victories against seven defeats with the Los Angeles Club of the Coast League last season, compared to Whitehill's record of 14 victories and 11 defeats with Washington in 1936.

Manager Stanley Harris slyly began negotiations for Salveson after inquiring about his talents at the minor league meeting in Montreal last week.

He was told by Bill Killefer and Dutch Ruether, former major league stars who are now managers in the Coast League, to "grab Salveson if you can get him. He's a sure shot to make good in the majors."

Of DeShong Type.

Salveson, 25 years old, is a bespectacled righthander of the size of Jimmy DeShong of the Nats' staff. He had trials with the Giants and Pirates as a raw rookie.

The White Sox's interest in the trade was their dire need of a left-handed pitcher and the Indians were quick to release Lee who had made no great impression in several trials. Manager Steve O'Neill, of the Indians, has long been partial to Whitehill.

Earlier, animated conversations between Owner Clark Griffith, of the Nats, and Manager Mickey Cochrane, of the Detroit Tigers, infused new credence in the belief that the two clubs are close to a player deal.

Negotiations which were halted yesterday after Griffith and Cochrane had laughed off each other's offers apparently are on again. Griffith and Cochrane dined together at luncheon at baseball headquarters and were deeply engaged in bargaining until Griffith was summoned to the meeting of American League Club owners.

Cochrane turned away on his heel yesterday when Griffith demanded Pitcher Jake Wade in addition to Elden Auker and Outfielder Pete

Majors Slap at Landis, Vote A Deader Ball

New York, Dec. 8.—Owners of the American and National League today voted for a less-lively ball in 1937, but in a more significant action both leagues were parties to a gentle slap at Baseball Commissioner Landis.

Indorsing the action of the minor leagues at Montral last week when Commissioner Landis was overruled in an effort to keep a close check on traffic in players between the major and minor leagues, the two big leagues similarly flouted Landis' authority.

The effect of the vote of the two big leagues on Landis decision in this Feller case is still regarded as problematical, but it was regarded in some quarters as a mandate to Landis to rule that Feller shall remain as the property of the Cleveland club.

Landis, seeking to prevent a recurrence of the celebrated Bob Feller case, which is now plaguing the American League, had asked the minor and major leagues to file with his office full information concerning all players recommended to minor league club by major league scouts.

American Vote Split.

He thus sought to enforce the rule forbidding big league clubs from being a party to signing players direct from the sandlots under the guise of first tendering them contracts with minor league teams with which they were affiliated.

While the National League vote against Landis' proposal was solid, the sentiment in the American League was divided, with the Cleveland club casting a dissenting vote in the hope of retaining the good will of Landis, who soon must make a decision on the Feller case. The Indians hope to retain title to Feller, who blossomed as a pitching sensation despite the fact he was placed direct from the sandlot.

In voting for the less lively ball, the two leagues suggested a compromise between the 1936 ball and the thick-covered ball of 1933, which sent batting averages and home-run records plummeting.

Olson Faces Kirklevko In Mat Bout Tomorrow

Another famous rassle feud for Washington will be enacted tomorrow night in the Arena when Cliff Olson, the strong-armed Swede, defends the "world championship" against Martin Kirklevko, the Russian Bear. The finish will be for one fall, with four other matches going the 30-minute route.

Irish Jack Donovan meets Henry Piers, and in the semifinal John Katurnis and Bert Rubre will tangle. Hank Barber, the Dartmouth college man, and Ed Meske, of Ohio, occupy the other spots on the program.

Horse Doping Net Snares Kayfetz

60-Day Ban Is Asked; Bubbling Springs Is Feature Winner.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town Race Track, Dec. 8.—The earnest effort of officials of the Charles Town Jockey Club to wipe out the horse-doping evil caught another trainer in its net, stewards announced this afternoon. Aaron Kayfetz, trainer of the horse, Icy Wind, was suspended for the remainder of the meeting with recommendation that the ban on him carry for sixty days.

The report of the Government chemist showed that Icy Wind was stimulated with strychnine when he won here on December 1, and paid a $23.40 mutuel.

Kayfetz is the third trainer to be charged with doping in two days. Trainers Wilson and Shenski as well as former jockey McNair were ruled off yesterday for similar offenses.

"A Kayfetz, trainer of Icy Wind, suspended for the remainder of the meeting and recommended to the West Virginia Racing Commission that the suspension be continued for sixty days," the stewards said. "same ruling to apply to Icy Wind. The report of the Government chemist having shown positive strychnine by the order of the stewards."

The day's feature race was won by Bubbling Spring, owned by Mrs. Moreland Davis and trained by Selby L. Burch, of Washington, D. C. The daughter of Bud Lerner was given a good ride by Jockey L. Machado to win by a half length from L. W. Brown's Take Off. Star Magic was third in the vest pocket field of five.

Bubbling Spring, which lost a decision last week because she ran out at the turns, was kept in on the inside of the course today. Some of the interest in the race was erased with the scratching of John Hay Whitney's Enthusiasm.

Double Pays $298.60.

The winner was heavily backed at a $3.60 mutuel. The daily of $298.60 proved the highest of the meeting and went to those who played the 2-7 combination of Tuleyries Star and Great Loss.

C. A. Calhoun's Margaret Nadi scored a nose victory in the first race, barely taking the decision from Toothpick. Third money went to Betty Tour. The winner, a daughter of King Nadi, was hard ridden all the way after she broke on top. Toothpick had some early trouble and closed willingly. The winner, ridden by Jockey Al Tryon, paid a $6.50 mutuel.

Tuleyries Star, ridden by Jockey L. Machado, won the second race by a neck margin from the favored Sun Sweep. Third in the field of eight was Darling Pat. The winner, trained by C. M. Feltner, went to the front at once, but ran wide entering the stretch, carrying out Darling Pat. Sun Sweep, which had been chasing the top two, came through on the rail and rallied too late. The winner paid a $24.80 mutuel.

Long shot players made it two winners in a row when Great Loss, with Shanks riding, took the third race by 12 lengths. Depinard was second and Valley Rose third in the cheap field of maidens. Great Loss had some early trouble with Depinard and then drew far out. Jockey Wimmer got a mud bath at the first turn when he fell off Occoquan. The winner paid $22.60.

Bromide Wins Fourth.

Bromide, a $4.60 favorite, won the fourth race in a thrilling three-horse finish that found him a head in front of Early Dawn which nosed out Justa Play for the place money. Justa Play appeared to be winning the race midway of the stretch, but Jockey Machado, for reasons best known to himself, did not ride with his usual vigor at the end. Three of the eight starters went amiss in the running. Injustice broke a leg at the first turn, Rock Spray went lame, as did Conventional.

TULEYRIES STAR, first in motion, was hard ridden throughout, but ran out at the first turn carrying DARLING PAT with her; however, she rallied to last ahead of SUN SWEEP. The latter was poorly handled, was taken up along the backstretch, saved ground entering the stretch and was wearing down the winner at the end. DARLING PAT, away slowly, had to go far out for racing room at the first turn, went to the pacemaker with good speed, but failed to rally after being carried wide. ROQUEPINE went evenly, but could not threaten. The others were outrun.

THIRD RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $300; claiming. For maiden 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place same. Went to post at 2:33½. Off at 2:35. Winner, H. GREAT LOSS moved up on DEPINARD to take command entering the backstretch, drew far out and won easily. DEPINARD was rushed to the front at once, could not match speed with GREAT LOSS, but finished gamely under weak handling. VALLEY ROSE, outrun for three furlongs, closed gamely. MARY WALES dropped back after the start. OCCOQUAN lost rider swinging wide at the first turn.

DAILY DOUBLE PAID $298.60.

BROMIDE assumed command at the first turn, withstood repeated challenges from EARLY DAWN and just lasted under good handling. EARLY DAWN ran lapped on the outside of the winner throughout and closed gamely. JUSTA PLAY was weakly handled throughout, gained in the stretch and finished on his own courage, Machado making a very listless finish. ROCK SPRAY was far back throughout and pulled up lame. CONVENTIONAL, off alertly, dropped out of it and pulled up lame. INJUSTICE broke down badly at the first turn and was pulled up.

FIFTH RACE—About 5 furlongs. Purse, $500. The Wirt; allowances. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:35. Off at 3:39. BUBBLING SPRING, rushed to the front at once, had to be strongly handled while attempting to run out at the turns, was put to severe pressure to hold TAKE OFF safe in the final drive. The latter pressed the pace throughout and showed a good effort. SHAGGY ANN had early speed, STAR MAGIC and BARBIZON were outrun.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400. The Wayne; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:07½. Off at 4:08. Two-dollar mutuels paid—JIM MOSS, $6.40, $4.00, $3.00; NEVER IDOL, $5.40, $4.20; LUCKY TURN, $6.00.

JIM MOSS shook off CHANNING to draw out to a good lead along the backstretch, but had to be kept to stout drive through the stretch and barely lasted ahead of NEVER IDOL. The latter, last at the quarter, worked his way up boldly on the outside to loom menacingly and gained slowly through the final sixteenth. LUCKY TURN came from far back to close with good energy. CHANNING dropped out of it after showing good speed for a half. HIGH SONATA had early speed.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-fourth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:37½. Off at 4:40½. Winner, Mrs. R. W. LEGENDER disposed of ARBRANCH to take a slight lead, was challenged throughout by LUCULENT and withstood a long drive to hold sway at the end. LUCULENT, in the thick of contention from the start, fought it out willingly with the winner. BROWN WREN raced wide all the way and failed to threaten. GOLDEN PLAY was forced to take up at the far turn and closed some ground. WAR PROFITS could not threaten.

Time Out! By Chet Smith

"Can I run you folks home?"

At the Post . . .

Charles Town Race Track, Dec. 8.

Dear Al:

Horsemen here asked track officials to extend the meeting for another week. In a petition signed by virtually every trainer on the grounds, they say that due to the large number of horses present, some have not had a chance at purses. Action on the matter is expected later in the week. This track deserves credit. For some reason there wasn't a stimulating case revealed in Maryland during the fall and just a few throughout the country. Here, three horses have been found doped and the stewards have quickly made the charges public. Personally, they regret that longer suspensions cannot be given those who cheat the public and ruin horses. Disclosing these cases is not helping the betting here at the moment. However, the honesty of the action is building a good reputation for all concerned. The dimes are rolling in but not in the numbers that I had expected. I believe that more than 27 persons read my column telling about sending dimes to the Bill Bennings poll as a vote for District racing. All the money goes into The Post's toy fund. I enjoyed those notes, especially the one that read: "Bill, you are a nice fellow; you come from a good family; I like you—but your selections are lousy." Now, there's a pal, and it cost him only a dime. Send them in people, just a dime a squawk—and all for a good cause.

BILL.

First race—Big Dipper seems well placed in the field. Likes the off track and should not be hindered by the weight assignment. Parade On appears best of the others which are assured a place at the starting gate. On the also eligible list, Barnstormer and Doeskin loom as dangerous if in action.

Second race—Wise Count will find conditions in his favor. He prefers the soft track and any price will be a good one. Handley and Lady Dunlin to take care of the others.

Third race—Chief Hollis will have Johnny Shanks in the saddle and expect the pair to make every post a winning one. Nella Canter gets in with only 109 pounds and is dangerous. Blind Talk to take care of the others.

Fourth race—Currants and Balmacan promise to battle it out for the chief award in this field. Both are fit as those last efforts. Warned Off showed fair speed on the milers and is a possible surprise. Soupcon would have to be considered, but is far down the list.

Fifth race—Young Agnes, first on the also eligible list, had some trouble last out and showed a good race. With clear sailing tomorrow this one will be a keen threat if not the winner. Happy Hostess was away poorly the other day and deserves another chance. Kemwick for the show.

Sixth race—Rough Party, after two defeats, is slated to have Palumbo up tomorrow and, although racing at a short route, must be placed on top. Silver Arch likes the track and is the one to beat. Zippy may be third.

Best bet—Currants.

1—Parade On, Noajoyce, Doeskin.
2—Handley, Wise Count, Thistle Dina.
3—Nella Canter, Chief Hollis, Blind Talk.
4—Warned Off, Twidrets, Balmacan.
5—Young Agnes, Graywick, Happy Hostess.
6—Rough Party, Roy Boy, Stingaree.
7—Eddie Wrack, Chatteress, Three Grand.

Best bet—Young Agnes.
—Clocker Mike.

Hoya, Old Line Fives Need Centers to Put Out Strong Teams

'Terps Have 6 Lettermen On Squad

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Boasting a wealth of excellent basketball material at all positions but center, and envisioning successful championship races in their respective conferences, Georgetown and Maryland are casting about for centers to fit in with their high-geared court machines.

Maryland lost Vic Willis via the eligibility route, as he used up one year by returning to school in February two years ago and competing throughout the remainder of the season. He was a vital cog in the Terrapin scheme of things the past two years and will be sorely missed.

Georgetown needed a tap-off man badly last year until Coach Fred Mesmer dug up Mike Petroskey, a big and clumsy but willing candidate. Big Mike immediately proceeded to make himself the most important man on the Hoya quintet, which was powerless without his presence in the line-up. He was a good jumper and an invaluable ball retriever under the backboard.

Petroskey Handicapped.

Big Mike is back this year, but after undergoing an appendectomy and his value is uncertain. He may be as good as ever or even better, but certainly will be handicapped physically and Mesmer, in addition to that, is not willing to have him work as hard and painstakingly as the boy did last winter.

Tony Barabas and a couple of rookie candidates are being groomed for Big Mike's role to help out—if help is necessary, and if this position is adequately cared for the Blue and Gray will be going places. Carroll Shore, Tommy Nolan, Buddy Nau, Harry Bassin, Don Gibeau, Mario Gregorio, Ben Zola and a raft of others are back and raring to go. There are guards and forwards, long shot and snowbird artists aplenty, certain to amass an impressive string of victories if given half a chance. The big question is that of a center.

Terps Have Lettermen.

At Maryland, Coach Burt Shipley has six lettermen back from last year, in addition to some good talent up from the freshmen. Bill Guckeyson, the Terps' all-around star and quadruple threat, may decide to play this year and his presence on the roster will give Maryland two topnotch ball clubs.

Al Waters, "Little Knocky" Thomas, Charley Keller, Waverly Wheeler, Johnny McCarthy and Bill Bryant are the returning veterans—a team in themselves, with McCarthy to do the jumping. Up from the freshmen are Eddie Johnson, center or forward; Bob Neilson, forward; Milt Mullitz, guard, and George Rensberg, center. Maryland is blessed with an abundance of material—good material—but the center problem is just as acute as it is at Georgetown.

The Terps will be a power in the Southern Conference and Georgetown will have a big voice in the disposition of Eastern Conference laurels—if their centers come through.

G-Men Cagers Defeat Sterling Five, 39 to 12

Bureau of Investigation's basketball team opened its campaign last night at Central High School with a 39-12 victory over Sterling Restaurant, with Jim and Herbie Thompson, formerly of Duke University, heading the attack with 13 and 8 points, respectively.

The G-men, who are coached by Ed Colliflower, were in front 22-5 at half time.

3 Heurich Cup Court Games Tonight

WPA to Meet Firemen; CCC vs. Sterling; Fort Myer vs. D. and H.

Competition in the Heurich Cup Basketball League will be resumed tonight at the Heurich Gym, with District WPA engaging District Fire Department at 9:30, Sterling Restaurants meeting CCC Camp (Geo.) at 7:30 and Fort Myer and Delaware & Hudson battling at 8:30.

WPA's quintet will seek a reversal of form in its game with the firefighters, for the Keppel-coached team hopes to be at its peak for Saturday night's contest with the high-powered Abbott's Dairy, of Philadelphia, at Heurich's Gym.

A new professional basketball team was formed yesterday, and will play under the banner of Coffey Sales this winter. The team has recruited some high class college talent, numbering among its stars Bozey Berger, former All-American while at University of Maryland; Moon Evans, Vic Willis, Buckey and Bernie Buscher, all erstwhile Maryland luminaries; Jim Forney, late of Baylor University, and Theo Alford, 6-foot-3 All-Conference center from Baylor.

An attractive schedule is being arranged for the Coffey stars, who plan to play a number of their games at the Hippodrome in New York.

With reports reaching their ears that the Johnson Motor Zephers, of Shepherdstown, W. Va., were bringing a team of former college captains, the Heurich Brewers went through a brisk workout last night at Heurich gym for the battle Sunday. Tuffy Leemans wil make his debut with the Brewers in the game.

Funeral Rites For T. J. Fuller Set Today

Funeral services for Fred J. Fuller, manager of Kenwood Golf and Country Club for the last two years, will be held at 2 p. m. today at the Chambers chapel, 517 Eleventh street southeast, with prominent golfing members serving as pallbearers.

Mr. Fuller, 66, died Monday morning at his home at the Kenwood Club following a two-month illness.

Born in Great Barrington, Mass., Mr. Fuller was general manager of a group of hotels in New York City for several years. Among other clubs he managed were the Newark Athletic Club and the Level Club in New York.

Surviving him are his wife, Mrs. Ethel M. Fuller; two daughters, Ethel and Eleanor; a brother, George Fuller, of Great Barrington, and a sister, Mrs. Maude Frien, also of Great Barrington.

Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Mr. Fuller's death came as a distinct shock to his legion of friends at Kenwood. While at the club he made many improvements in keeping with the times, and the membership, it was pointed out, jumped from some 300 to close to 600. Until illness overtook him, Mr. Fuller managed to get in from four to five rounds of golf a week.

Collegiate Grid Problem Now Is 'Dead'

Carnegie Investigation of Player Subsidization Is Unlikely.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 8.—Without trying to ascribe a reason for it, the problems connected with the recruiting of college football players apparently are as dead as the famous Carnegie report which brought them into the open years ago.

There have been sporadic reports of a flimsy nature that the Carnegie Foundation is going to make another investigation, but using the pathetic attitude of some of the Nation's leading institutions and their athletic leaders as a yard stick almost everybody, with the usual few exceptions, seems to be content to let well enough alone.

The old bugbears have been the cause for a few scattered skirmishes and conversations. The Reynolds plan, which would have legalized modified subsidization in the Big Ten was voted down, 9 to 1. But the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association decreed yesterday an athlete "may accept tuition scholarships and work for the college to pay for his schooling, without fear of censure."

The fate of the "Granam plan," aimed at elimination of subsidization and recruiting, will be decided when the Southern Conference meets in Richmond Friday and Saturday. Frank Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and author of the plan, which was put into effect this season, will press for further tightening of the rules. Forest Fletcher, of Washington and Lee, president of the conference, has said that he will seek its abolition.

A five-point scheme will be presented by Dr. F. C. ("Prog") Allen, athletic director of the University of Kansas, to the American Association of University and College Presidents. He proposes that athletic competition in major schools be limited to the last two years, reduction to three years of competition in smaller schools now permitting four, adoption of a national no-transfer rule to eliminate "tramp" athletics, schedules of games between schools of different rank would be prohibited, and eligibility would be predicated on a student's advancement toward a decree rather than on a basis of "outmoded definitions of amateur and professional."

Mixed Doubles Teams Vie at Silver Spring

Gulli and Clark to Oppose Simmons and Von Dreele Sunday.

A sterling mixed doubles match which has been brewing for some time was finally hatched by Earl Stocking, manager of the Silver Spring alleys, between Lorraine Gulli and Astor Clarke, of Washington, and Ida Simmons, of Norfolk, Va., and Ray Von Dreele, of Baltimore, for this coming Sunday, at the Silver Spring mapleways.

The forthcoming match is a "bowling natural," bringing together the country's present ranking No. 1 man and woman bowlers, Astor Clarke and Ida Simmons, and two former national ranking stars.

The two local stars have been traveling at a fast clip this season, Miss Gulli having just last week emerged victorious over a field of 31 entries in the Meyer Davis Sweepstakes, and Astor Clarke having just reached the high individual average mark in the District League. Besides this the local pair are co-holders of the world record mixed doubles five-game set with a pinfall of 1,301.

Ida Simmons, the Norfolk ace, is making rapid gains toward her third national championship, carrying an average of over 123 pins per game in the South Atlantic Ladies League. With Von Dreele as her partner they annexed the St. Patrick's Day Sweepstakes last season at the Silver Spring drives.

The match consists of ten games, the first five starting at 2 o'clock and the second at 7:30 p. m.

The leading Green Bag Coffee team took a tailspin in the Sanico League at Convention Hall, emerging on the short end of its match with Jumbo Butter. Frank Ortlesky enhanced his bid for high individual average with a 143 game and F. Gonnerman shot a 372 set giving Hunts Fruit high team game and set honors with 565 and 1,570.

Johnny Anderson, fiery star of the Premier Cab team, beat a merry staccato on the maples last night in the Columbia Heights League at Arcadia, chalking up a new high season record game of 169, bettering the mark formerly held by Bill Campitt, of the Vincent Barbers, by two pins. In losing possession of the season's high game, Clampitt retalliated with a new high set record of 432, surpassing Red Megaw's record by three pins.

Cools Fountain strengthened its hold on first place, rolling a 649 game in taking a forfeit from Ben Hundley. Hessick Coal Co. retained second place with an odd game victory over Arcade Sunshine Laundry, and Vincent Barbers' 1,819 set was good for three wins over Arcadia. Hertz Drivurself dropped to fourth, bowing twice to C. & C. Restaurant.

With Frank Malone chipping the pins for a 151 game and 382 set, Claims annexed high team game and set laurels in the Veterans' Administration League, at Convention Hall alleysfi rolling 536 and 1,524, respectively.

Capt. Lorraine Gulli advanced her El Gees team to the top of the Washington Ladies' League, rolling a 142 game and 352 set. The Shamrocks were forced to relinquish command by dropping two games to the Colonials. The Hyattsville Juniors are issuing a challenge to any other junior team in Washington, Maryland or Virginia. The age limit is 21. A match can be arranged by contacting Oscar Hiser at Hyattsville 1024.

Stuck

Nobody's Going to Give a Whole Ball Club for Dean

By Paul Mickelson.
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Dec. 8.—Listening and peeping around the potted palms of the big league baseball meetings:

Stuck—the Cardinals still have Dizzy Dean and apparently are stuck with him. All Branch Rickey wants for his big pitching headache is a whole ball club.

From the Pirates he wants Cy Blanton, Arky Vaughan, Catcher Padden, four good Pirate farmers and cash. From the Giants he asks Hal Schumacher, Clydell Castleman, Mel Ott, three farmers and cash. He was easy on the Cubs, demanding Bill Lee, Frank Demaree, four lesser lights and greenbacks.

They're now betting 2 to 1, and no takers, the Cards keep Dizzy, who'll make a great commotion over a new contract and then sign with his usual prediction of a pennant and a request for a baseball.

The real inside is the Cards have given up on Paul Dean. They aren't figuring him in their 1937 line-up. Despite Paul's protests that he's rarin' to go, the Cards' bosses figure he'll never be a first class major leaguer again. His inflamed shoulder is that bad, they say.

Rickey says he expects no undue trouble signing Dizzy—if Dizzy isn't peddled. "We both have a lot of fun," says Rickey, "but all comes out okay." Some baseball men think Dizzy will be hearder to tame than a Texas steer next spring. After telling the world that Dizzy was not so important—that the Cards won four pennants without him and one with him—Rickey turns around and claims the club that has Diz next season will win the pennant by ten games. Diz is sure to remind him of that one.

Dead . . . the day's meeting reached such a dead mark that they even voted to make the baseball deader. They don't know how they're going to make an older man out of the lively ball, but the stitches may be raised a little, giving the pitcher a better grip on the hide. Bob Quinn, prexy of the Boston Bees, says the meetings have been so dead that he feels ten years older. Jimmy Dykes, of the White Sox, got so tired of standing around and doing no business that he went to Philadelphia last night to bowl in an industrial league. He rolled nine straight strikes. Then someone shouted Luke Appling at him. He got a split on the tenth roll, finishing up with 266. Everybody in the American League wants Appling, including the White Sox.

Two astounding pieces of news were revealed. The National League awarded its 1936 pennant to the Giants; the Yankees were awarded the American League flag. Each voted $100 each to buy new pennants.

Diamond Dust . . . The minor leagues aren't what they used to be. Judge W. G. Bramham, commissioner of the minors, today estimated that all but 10 of the 186 minor league clubs were owned or connected with a major league club by working agreements. The Cardinals lead with 24 farms or working agreements with the Yankees second and the Cincinnati Reds third.

Milwaukee is in the sorriest plight of a class AA club. The Tigers wrecked the Little World series champs by pulling out of Milwaukee and transferring their working agreement with Toledo . . . Mrs. Frank Navin, widow of the late owner of the Tigers, is still a red hot baseball fan. She can be seen frequently around the huddles . . . John Seys, vice president of the Cubs, has introduced a new rubber home plate which he says will save many broken legs. Seys' invention gives a home plate buried under ground except for the bare plate surface. Thus, no player can hook the plate on a slide home.

At almost every huddle someone brings up Leo (Lippy) Durocher, of the Cardinals, who gets better with age. They can't understand how Leo, once regarded as one of the poorest hitters in the game, can improve year after year. It's all a mystery.

Tom Yawkey boasted he still hasn't taken his hands out of his pocket.

"My fingers never were so warm and cozy," laughed the heavy spender of the Boston Red Sox, who isn't doing any spending.

Whitehill Goes To Indians in 3-Way Deal

Fox in exchange for Buck Newsom, but he displayed new interest in the Washington Club's demands today.

Demands Reasonable.

"We are not asking too much," said Griffith, "and we will not take less for Newsom. Unless we could get two pitchers for Newsom we would be weakening a staff that needs bolstering now. I think the deal may be made before tomorrow night."

Cochrane's offer of $50,000 cash for Newsom brought only a laugh from Bucky Harris, who pointed out that if the Tigers had that kind of money to spend and couldn't buy an acceptable pitcher then the Washington club could hardly hope to replace Newsom by another purchase.

Harris, himself, had been willing to trade Newsom to the Tigers in exchange for the under-handed Auker and Fox, but Griffith wrecked that deal with his demand that the left-handed Wade also be included in the trade.

The only other concrete developments during a day-long of lobby stalking b y the American League managers and owners were the release of Pitcher George Blaeholder and Outfielder Jim Gleeson by the Athletics to Kansas City.

Manager Steve O'Neill of the Indians, met the latest attempt of the Boston Red Sox to acquire Outfielder Joe Vosmik by rejecting an entirely new offer.

Sox Bid Fails.

The Red Sox sought to obtain Vosmik by offering Catcher Rick Ferrell and Infielder Bill Werber in exchange for Vosmik, Catcher Frankie Pytlak and an outfielder named Heinrich. A counter offer by Cleveland sought Ferrell in return for Pitcher Hildebrand and Pytlak.

By the hour the owners and managers assembled here showed an increasing aversion for the commodity known as cash which is supposed to be the underlying motif of the baseball industry. Offers of cash for players brought only a laugh with the response that they would trade only for players in return.

Thus it was that Mickey Cochrane's offer of $20,000 for Pitcher Johnny Whitehead was rejected by Manager Jimmy Dykes, of the White Sox, who is bent on ridding the team of Whitehead, but not at the sacrifice, apparently, of being loaded down with dollars.

Packers' Back Sets Passing Record

His Aerials Netted 1,239 Yards; Leemans Tops Pro Ground Gainers.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 8.—They're calling Arnold Herber the Dizzy Dean and Carl Hubbell of the National Professional Football League.

The strike-pitching, pass-throwing star of the Green Bay Packers, who will meet the Boston Redskins for the championship Sunday in the Polo Grounds, established a couple of records during the regulation 12-game season and virtually tossed the Packers to the Western Division title.

Herber, who entered the professional game from Regis College, completed 77 of 173 passes for an average of 44 per cent and 1,239 yards. The yardage these completions gained shattered the old mark of 963 made by Harry Newman with the New York Giants three years ago. This total is believed to be a record in the annals of American football history.

Leemans Leads.

Don Hutson, formerly of Alabama's Crimson Tide, was Herber's chief battery mate. Hutson caught 34 passes for 536 yards, thereby giving him two new league records. The former standards were 26 catches for 432 yards by Tod Goodwin, of the Giants, last year. All told, the 1,239 yards gained on Herber's aerials surpassed the yards gained on passes by any entire team in the circuit.

Hutson also was the leading touchdown scorer, with nine to his credit, but scoring honors of the season belong to the veteran Earl (Dutch) Clark, of the Detroit Lions. Clark crossed the pay stripe seven times; kicked 19 points after touchdown, and booted four field goals for an aggregate of 73 points. Jack Manders, of the Chicago Bears, was second with 62 points and Huston third, 54.

Tuffy Leemans, New York Giants recruit from George Washington University, topped the ground-gainers with 830 yards as eight players surpassed the 1935 total of 499. Ace Gutowsky, of Detroit, was only 3 yards behind in second place with 827. Manders and Armand Nicolai, of Pittsburgh, tied with seven field goals each for honors in that department.

The Boston Redskins have pitched camp at the Westchester Country Club at Rye, while the Packers are expected to arrive in New York tomorrow and will workout daily in the Polo Grounds.

Collective Action Needed, Says Tom K. Smith, A. B. A. President.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 8.—The major questions confronting banking today call for collective action by all banks and cannot be solved by individual banks acting separately, Tom K. Smith, president American Bankers Association, declared in an address here tonight before the meeting of the Massachusetts Bankers Association, at the Hotel Statler. He also described the activities of the American Bankers Association in dealing with the problem of Government lending.

"Most of our banking problems today are problems of a national character," he said. "You will have to cope with them whether you happen to be connected with a state bank or with a national bank, and you cannot solve them alone. This means that you must have a strong national organization representing you in Washington. This organization should not be a lobby. The American Bankers Association has never supported a lobby. But if the association is to protect the interests of the chartered banks and their customers in dealing with the Government, we must have the support, both moral and financial, of all our banks, because we can be most effective when we can assure Federal agencies and committees of Congress that we represent in our membership all the chartered banks of the country.

Nation-Wide Questions.

"The American Bankers Association is the only means we have of dealing with economic questions of a Nation-wide character. Let us give it the support which its record of performance and promise of future effort so well deserve."

Referring to the Government emergency lending agencies, he said:

"With reference to the emergency lending agencies, the President and others in authority have said that their activities would be curtailed wherever and whenever chartered banks were willing and able to carry the load. For some time now the American Bankers Association, with the co-operation of the Government officials, has been making a survey of the ways and means in which various Federal lending agencies operate. We have placed the facts before the banks. The next step is to determine what proportion of loans being made by the Government could and would be handled by chartered banks if the Government should retire from the lending field.

"The committee on banking studies expects to ask each State committee to make an exhaustive survey through appropriate county organizations so that we may have the answer to this question. With this information the association will feel qualified to make definite recommendations as to how Government competition may be eliminated if and where it exists."

General Motors Sales a Record For November

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 8.—General Motors Corporation today reported sales to consumers in the United States in November were 155,552 units, the highest for the month on record, and compared with 136,859 in November, 1935.

Total sales to dealers in the United States and Canada, together with overseas shipments, were 191,720 units, which was likewise a November record. In the same month last year total was 182,754 cars and trucks.

United States consumer sales in the first 11 months of this year were the highest on record. They totaled 1,546,741 units against 1,156,798 in the similar period last year. American dealers bought 1,485,529 cars in the 11 months in contrast with 1,220,824 in the same period of 1935.

Sales to dealers in this country in November also constituted a record for the month, totaling 156,041 units against 147,849 in November, 1935.

Bank Loans Rise, Reserves Decrease

An increase in commercial loans and a drop in reserves with Federal Reserve banks were reported yesterday in the Reserve Board's weekly-condition statement of member banks in 101 leading cities.

For the week ended December 2, the banks' advances to industry, business and agriculture increased $27,000,000 to $4,068,000,000, or $653,000,000 over the same week a year ago.

Falling $60,000,000 to $5,371,000,000 reserves with Federal Reserve banks still were $477,000,000 over the same week last year.

The decline for the week was attributable to seasonal currency demands. Reserves are expected to decrease until the first of the year, when a return flow of money to the banks will boost them again.

B. & O. Nov. Freight Sets Five-Year Record

Carloadings on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for November, which was the best November since 1931, totaled 214,381, comprising 142,168 cars loaded on line and 72,213 received from connections.

This was an increase of 38,765 cars loaded over the month of November, 1935, when the total was 175,616, consisting of 113,989 cars loaded on line and 61,627 received from connections.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Improve in Less Active Trading; Government Bonds Recede; Wheat Dips.

New York, Dec. 8.—Improvement in most financial markets, but without increased energy, marked the day. The impact of the new Treasury issues seemed to depress the Government bond list, but other bonds did fairly well. Stocks moved irregularly higher on a turnover of around 1,600,000 shares, the smallest since November 2. December wheat gave up an eighth of a cent to 125¾ cents a bushel.

Stocks found conditions more favorable from the start. Instead of the recent speculative activity in low-priced shares increasing distrust of the market, the mild settling down of standard issues seems to have recreated a desire for them. Although the riffraff of the stock market continued to attract attention, the leaders of the initial rise were the old line issues, particularly the steel shares, the motors and the rails.

The price range was fairly narrow, but in spite of a good deal of irregularity throughout the trading the tone was firm. Gains among the railroad shares averaged a point. Central, Santa Fe, Great Northern, and Southern Pacific were prominent. Rail equipments were mixed. Most of the metal shares worked higher, but Cerro weakened a little. Amusement issues hardened.

Among the stocks to report sharp gains were American Zinc, Electric Power, General Steel Castings preferred, Granite City Steel, Guantanamo Sugar, Laclede Gas, Pittsburgh Coal and Warren Brothers. Pittsburgh Steel preferred jumped more than half a dozen points to a new high price. Newport industries fell back under profit taking.

Foreign exchanges did not suggest any fresh flow of money this way, but on the contrary sterling and francs turned quite strong.

Smaller Oversubscription.

Rumblings of a tighter monetary policy failed to crush demand for the new Government bond offer, in spite of the lowest coupon rate, 2½ per cent, available for a medium long-term issue in the past 25 or 30 years. On the surface the announcement of a subscription of four times the amount offered looked as though the market thought exceedingly well of the issue. Of even more importance was the fact that the new bonds brought a market premium of more than a point above the subscription price of parity.

Various conclusions will be drawn from the record. The first comment in the financial district was that the market was a shade disappointed with the terms of the new issue, for while a four times subscription looks high, the last previous issue was oversubscribed 12 times—that is, the market now turns out to be only a third as favorable to the Treasury. However, that scarcely means by itself any deterioration in Government credit, any more than the previous high subscription meant increased confidence.

Money Influence.

The money market is more of a controlling factor at this time than is the fiscal policy of the Treasury with regard to budget balancing and the total of the debt. On that score a smaller subscription might have been anticipated, for open market rates are no easier than they were a few months ago, commercial demand for credit has risen somewhat, and the Federal Reserve Board and the administration have given some pretty plain hints that shortly after the first of the year steps would be taken to reduce the surplus of credit in the market.

To that adverse factor must be added the fresh attempt of the Treasury to prevent mere padding of the subscription lists, a practice which for a long time has obscured the real demand for Government bonds. It has been almost a sure thing for the last two or three years that, because of the determination of the Government to maintain cheap money and to support its own bonds, each new Treasury offering would go to a premium. That has given subscribers a chance for profit without risk, the only problem being to secure bonds at the offering price.

Demand for the new bonds grew so large and dumping on the market became so heavy, after the day or two of "joyriding" for the inevitable point or so of premium, that this time the Treasury announced a new scheme to curb the evil. It withdrew the privilege to small subscribers to have allotments in full. Thinking that they would get a larger percentage of allotment on their subscriptions, the banks, herefore, were less inclined to ask for more than they wanted in order to get the actual amount. Moreover, subscriptions outside the banks were more closely scrutinized and the small fry were discouraged from subscribing.

Banking Position.

Renewed expansion in miscellaneous and commercial loans, carrying the total up $27,000,000 to a new high record, was the feature of the condition statement of reporting member banks in 101 cities as of December 2. New York banks in the period added $22,000,000 to their holdings of Treasury obligations and Chicago banks purchased $12,000,000 on balance, but banks in other sections of the country continued to sell, the portfolio of all banks being $5,000,000 lower on the week. Other securities went up $37,000,000, but the bulk of this expansion was believed to relate to recent State and municipal offerings. There were considerable shifts in deposits between districts, but the aggregate of demand deposits adjusted in all the banks, curiously enough, remained at exactly the figure of November 25. Time deposits went up $19,000,000 in New York but were down $16,000,000 elsewhere. There were only nominal changes in amount of brokerns' loans, loans on securities to others, acceptances and commercial paper and real estate advances. Member bank reserves went down $60,000,000.

Tax Saving.

The result of the new policy of Chesapeake Corporation, mentioned recently in The Sun, for calculating profit or loss on conversion of bonds into C. & O. stock, appears in the September 30 statement showing a deduction of $324,557 from surplus instead of a profit of $727,746 that would have been added to surplus under the old plan. Chesapeake now picks out specific blocks of C. & O. for delivery on conversions instead of the earliest acquired shares. The high-cost shares that are turned over to bondholders in this way reduce the liability for tax on undistributed profits.

Retail Sales.

Chain store sales in November did not maintain the pace of the preceding month, but continued to increase over last year. An even dozen in the fixed price group, according to a compilation by The Sun, showed an advance of 2.5 per cent from November a year ago and a decrease of 9.3 per cent under sales in October. For the first eleven months of this year ten of this group reported a rise of 9.2 per cent above the corresponding months of 1935.

Sears, Roebuck Sales Set All-Time Peak

Chicago, Dec. 8 (AP).—Sears, Roebuck & Co., reported today sales for the eleventh period from November 6 to December 3 totaled $47,870,763, an increase of 26 per cent compared with the corresponding 1935 period. This volume established a new all-time high record for the period and brought Sears' sales for the fiscal year to date, from January 30 to December 3, to $435,803,581, an increase of 26.9 per cent compared with the corresponding period last year.

Cotton Report Notes Slight Gain in Month

Prices Advance Briskly After Publication of Forecast.

By the Associated Press.

A 7,000-bale increase in the cotton crop for the past month was estimated yesterday by the crop reporting board as it placed the total yield at 12,407,000 bales, based on December 1 conditions, compared with 12,400,000 bales a month earlier.

The report said that indicated yield per acre this season was 197.6 pounds, well above the average last season of 186.3 and the ten-year average of 169.9 for 1923-32. Harvested acreage estimated at 30,054,000 acres was said to be 10 per cent larger than in 1935.

The board said that two separate droughts affected the 1936 crop. The first in May and June retarded the crop in Georgia and the Carolinas, but "favorable summer and fall" weather was said to have increased out-turn in the eastern end of the cotton belt by 600,000 bales between August 1 and December 1.

The western end of the belt, particularly Texas and Oklahoma, was damaged by drought late in the season, the board said. Although late rains also aided this section, the board said prospects in Texas and Oklahoma declined about 1,080,000 bales after August 1.

Favorable factors this season were the late arrival of frost and reduction of boll weevil damage to a minimum, it was said.

Cotton Futures Rise To Top for Season.

New York, Dec. 8 (AP).—Cotton futures rose to new high levels for the movement today following a Government estimate for a crop of 12,407,000 bales, which was in line with expectations.

The market opened 1 point lower to 6 higher with December under moderate pressure, while later months were influenced by trade buying and limited offers. On prebureau covering prices sold up to net gains of 3 to 10 points.

N. Y. 1st National Names Leon Fraser As New President

New York, Dec. 8 (AP).—Leon Fraser, former president of the Bank for International Settlements, was today elected president of the First National Bank of New York to succeed Jackson E. Reynolds, president since 1922. Reynolds will remain with the bank in an advisory capacity, an announcement by George F. Baker, chairman of the board, said.

The First National Bank, with resources of approximately $600,000,000, has long been one of the influential financial houses of the city. It was known as closely identified with the J. P. Morgan interests.

Fraser, born in Boston in November, 1889, started his professional career as a reporter on the New York World in 1913. The next year he was admitted to the bar and became a lecturer on political science at Columbia University, his Alma Mater.

He enlisted as a private in the Army when the United States entered the World War; was promoted a major in the Judge Advocate General's Department and served as assistant judge advocate of the service of supply in France. He holds many foreign decorations.

After the war Fraser practiced international law in Paris, was legal adviser to the American delegation to the London Prime Ministers Conference in 1924 and was general counsel for the Dawes plan and representative of the agent general for reparations payments from 1924 to 1927.

Japan Takes Rayon Lead From the U. S.

New York, Dec. 8.—Based upon figures published by the Japan Rayon Association covering output for the first ten months of 1936, Japanese rayon production this year will exceed United States production, according to the Textile Economics Bureau, Inc. Thus Japan will have passed the United States as the world's largest producer of rayon, a position which has been held by the United States since the World War.

Heavy Selling Drops Wheat From New Top

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 8.—Wheat climbed today to new peak prices unequaled for seven years, but then the gains were more than canceled by big selling to realize profits. Corn, oats, rye, soy beans and lard also attained fresh high price records and subsequently reacted.

An outstanding feature was announcement of huge export purchases of Canadian flour, the largest effected in any one week during the past four years.

$10,000,000 Long Island RR. Bonds Offered

Refunding Mortgage Issue Is Priced at 105½ Per Cent and Interest.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. are today offering at 105½ per cent and accrued interest to date of delivery, to yield 3.44 per cent to maturity, $10,000,000 of Long Island Railroad Co. 4 per cent refunding mortgage bonds, due March 1, 1949. By indorsement on the bonds, the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., which owns or controls the entire capital stock of the company, guarantees payment by the company of interest on and principal of these bonds. The bonds will not be redeemable before maturity.

Of the proceeds of the sale of these bonds, $6,584,100 will be used to retire at maturity $5,202,100 principal amount of the company's 20-year debenture 5 per cent bonds, due May 1, 1937; $650,000 Long Island City and Flushing Railroad Co. first consolidated mortgage 5 per cent bonds, due May 1, 1937, and $732,000 of equipment trust certificates maturing in 1937. The balance will be used to reimburse the treasury of the company for a portion of the expenditures heretofore made for capital purposes, including the retirement of debt.

The refunding mortgage is a lien on all the railroad and ferry property and other property and equipment used in connection with its railroad lines now owned by the company, subject (upon completion of this financing and payment of the obligations to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of these bonds, as stated above) to a total of $7,316,000 prior liens (including $385,000 owned by the company and pledged under its unified mortgage), which may not be increased, and subject, as to equipment, to $3,594,000 of equipment trust obligations.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 8.—Two youths, Arlie B. T. Jackson, 19, of Henderson, N. C., and Herbert Bonnett, 18, of Luray, Va., were returned to the State penitentiary today, facing two life sentences, each for armed highway robbery.

Warships Join Hunt for Plane Missing 2 Days

French and German Craft Cover Flying Boat's Route to Brazil.

By the Associated Press.

Dakar, Senegal, Dec. 8.—Three French warships joined French and German airplanes tonight in searching the South Atlantic for the giant French seaplane, Southern Cross, unreported since yesterday morning on its twenty-fifth transocean flight.

Planes flew along the route southwest of Dakar, where the four-motored mail plane, piloted by the noted flier, Jean Mermoz and carrying four others, sent its last radio report on a regular hop to Brazil. At 10:43 a. m., yesterday, Mermoz radioed that one of the motors had failed. The Southern Cross was then 420 miles southwest of Dakar, he said, and weather conditions were fine.

Officials of the Air France Co., which operates the South American plane service, said the radio had failed once before, but the plane completed the flight on time.

They felt no anxiety, they said, until the plane did not reach Natal, Brazil, on schedule at midnight.

They asserted, however, the Southern Cross could stay in the air for many hours, even with some of its motors out of operation.

By the Associated Press.

A broader judicial interpretation of the gold clause act of 1935, to include within its scope gold bullion as well as coin, was asked by the Government yesterday in a brief filed in Supreme Court.

In the brief, which it filed as a "friend of the court" in the case of the Holyoke Water Power Co. against the American Writing Paper Co., Inc., the Government argued the gold clause act, making gold coin obligations payable in devalued dollars, was applicable equally to gold bullion.

The case—scheduled for argument before the high tribunal Thursday—involves leases entered into more than 40 years ago and provides for payment in a stipulated quantity of gold of the old standard or its equivalent in currency.

The Government supported the paper company's contention that under the gold clause act it could meet its obligations to the power company with devalued dollars.

"To distinguish between various types of gold clauses having the same fundamental purpose and effect," the brief said, "would result in unwarranted inequities, increasing the burdens on some and giving an unjust enrichment to others."

Arguments on constitutionality of the Oregon criminal syndicalism law, which prohibits anyone from advocating industrial or political revolution by force, were brought before the court yesterday.

The measure was attacked by Dirk De Jonge, sentenced to serve seven years in the State penitentiary on conviction of violating the statute during a Communist meeting at Portland in 1934, called to protest against police activity during a seamen's strike.

Yule Business At High Speed, Survey Shows

By the Associated Press.

With the tide of Christmas buying flowing swiftly through the Nation's economic channels, the Commerce Department reported yesterday that business is rolling into the holiday season at the fastest clip since 1929.

Industrial production in the final quarter of 1936 has been sustained at the best level in seven years, employment and wages have continued upward and construction activity is increasing, a department survey said.

The stamping machines in the Nation's mints clattered at the liveliest pace in history to meet an unprecedented demand for small coins.

The Mint Bureau reported its coin-manufacturing plants have been operating on a 24-hour basis for the last six weeks, turning out millions of dollars in bright new dimes, nickels and other coins.

For the first five months of this fiscal year (July to November), the bureau said, coinage of pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters and half-dollars totaled $27,939,000, compared with $17,195,000 in the same period last year and only $6,125,000 in the similar 1929 months.

"Expansion in retail sales has been one of the bright spots in the business picture in recent weeks," the Commerce Department report said.

"With the advent of the Christmas buying season sales have advanced sharply, and it is generally anticipated that this period will bring the greatest volume of general merchandise sales since 1929."

In rural areas, it was said, sales may exceed 1929 levels.

The upturn was attributed in part to "the wave of year-end wage increases, bonus distributions and extra dividends, which afford an important sales stimulus missing in recent years."
